RECOMMENDATIONS.

The Poetical Geography.—This is a very meritorious and interesting work; and in regard to its originality is equalled by few, and surpassed by none of the works of the day. . . . If it does not succeed and become a popular one, it certainly is not the Author's fault.—New York True Sun.

The author has laboriously and ingeniously thrown the whole science of Geography into rhyme. . . . The lines flow smoothly, and give evidence of ease and skill in versification. It will prove an excellent aid in fastening the principal facts of Geography upon the memory as the common verse of "Thirty days hath September," &c., is in fixing the days of the month.—New York Evening Post.

This is a book every body admirably calculated and fitted for the wants of the nation. It is founded upon a known law of the mind, and discovers a new effort on the part of the author to plant into easy reading verse the simple unromantic facts of Woodbridge's Classical and Modern Atlas.—Worcester Republican Freeman.

This is an original composition—a model out from a new quarry, having upon its surface novelty and usefulness combined. It is not only a work of labor, and one that must have highly taxed the ingenuity of the rhymers. We think it one of the best of answering the purpose for which it was designed, viz: of giving the leading features of Geography a lasting stamp upon memory. But aside from the poetry, there is enough in the work to amply repay its entire cost price.—Cleveland True Democrat.

"A BOOK THAT IS A GOOD MAN."

The Poetical Geography.—Too much cannot be said in favor of this interesting publication. . . . in striking simplicity in language—a composition that must require a patient, plodding brain to have produced. It forms a complete system of Geography, containing the capes, rivers, cities, towns, islands, mountains of the globe, put into beautiful poetry, giving it a charm of pleasure, and for what they are needed and desired. Aside from the merits of the poetical rhymes, the quality appears to be the highest in prose. The sentences are so much told, clear, and free, that certainly one important point is learned. . . . of his responsibilities. The prose part is a model of the sublime and wonderful in nature, and in the most imposing natural scenery, it is a masterpiece of nature, celebrated fabric, rich, and pure.

The object of the work is to aid the memory, and principle that nothing is more easy to learn and remember than poetry, while, on the other hand, few things are more difficult than hard names and facts.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It is expected that Agents will act the honorable part with subscribers, and never the work for less than the subscription price, for this is abating our patrons, which is worst species of ingratitude.

As the Poetical Geography is sold only by Subscription, Agents are expected to call at every house, that every one may have a chance to purchase one or more copies.
