FOUR MILLIONS IN GREAT WATERWORKS

Highest Spillway Dam in the World to be Built—A Quartette of Huge Turbines

Spokane, Wash., Oct. 13.—Construction work soon will begin on what is declared to be the highest spillway dam in the world, at Long Lake, thirty miles north of Spokane, where the Washington Water Power Company will develop 80,000 electrical horse power with four turbines, each of 22,500 h. p., the largest yet constructed anywhere.

The dam will be 320 feet in length, 191 feet at the highest point and 145 feet in width at the base, built up of Cripplefoot masonry. The spillway is to be surrounded with three roller dams, each nineteen feet in diameter and sixty-five feet in length. In addition, there will be two gates, each twenty-five feet in length and nineteen feet in diameter.

The tunnel, through which the flow of the Spokane river will be diverted, is 225 feet in length and opens into a cut of 250 feet. It is thirty feet in width and twenty feet in height, and carries 8,000 cubic second feet of water. The entrance of the tunnel is of concrete and steel girders. It is expected to complete the plant in 1912. The total cost of work and equipment is placed at $4,000,000.

FIND THAT IRELAND IS CHANGED

What Members of the Eighty Club Have Found on Their Visit

CONFIDENCE IN FUTURE

London Chronicle Man's Letters to His Paper From Dublin and Belfast—A Sunday in the Capital—The Outlook for Home Rule

(Times Special Correspondence.)

Dublin, Oct. 3.—A correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle, who accompanied the Eighty Club on its visit to Ireland, says: "Ireland is changed. That is the first impression left by the experiences of members of the Eighty Club in the course of days that they have spent in the Irish capital. You cannot judge Ireland from Dublin, but you have seen men of varying political opinions, who know Ireland well, and they all agree that the condition of the country has been transformed."

"John Redmond, himself, in his cordial speech of welcome to the Eighty Club pilgrims, spoke of Ireland as a transformation. The same testimony reaches us from all sides, Unionist as well as Nationalist. We have ocular evidence that Dublin itself is revived, it is a city with all the air and graces of a capital, and with a highly individual character, especially in its architecture, so full of dignity and repose."

Confidence in Future

"The Dublin of these days has a thriving aspect. It may not be rich, but there are not wanting signs of a growing prosperity. Still more marked is the intellectual renaissance. You cannot be in Dublin even for a few days without being conscious of a strange stir in men's minds. Pride in Irish nationality is high; the sense of the future of Ireland is all but universal; you feel in the very atmosphere a buoyancy of spirit that heralds a new epoch. Dublin is awaiting with calm confidence the fruition of long-cherished hopes, often hallowed by the memory of a realization, but now at last destined to an early fulfilment."

"The rancor of religious and political animosities in Ireland has been greatly mitigated in the last dozen years. There is a growing recognition among men of all creeds and all parties that they have interests in common as Irishmen, and that Ireland needs the service of all her sons. It is true that political opinions still mainly follow the lines of religious belief; a Protestant is usually a Unionist, and a Roman Catholic is usually a Home Ruler. But these old walls of sectarian partition are breaking down."

"Loud lamentations are heard in England about the alienation of the working classes in the towns from the Christian churches. There is no ground for such complaint in Ireland. Here, in Dublin, the Irish democracy is intensely religious. Last Sunday I visited the Roman Catholic cathedral, a building of rather shabby exterior, situated in a mean quarter of the city. Vast crowds had gathered in the vicinity of the church—the great majority men and boys—all of them in their workday clothes, most of them obviously unskilled laborers, not of bad physique, but evidently very poor."

"Mass is celebrated at the pro-cathedral half a dozen times on Sunday morning. Every service is crowded. Immense congregations were dispersing before our eyes as another was assembling ready to enter the church. Men and women entered at different doors and occupied separate areas within. The eagerness to get admission into the sacred building was like nothing so much as the spectacle presented by an English crowd gathered for a big political meeting or a football match. Men and boys crowded on each other's heels, every one reverently crossing himself before entering and every one, however poor, dropping his penny into the bowl at the doors."

"From the pro-cathedral, passing on our way through dismal streets with the marks of poverty and neglect upon houses and people, we reached the desolate street in Gardiner street. In this gracious and solemnly beautiful temple the worshipper has all the aids that equidistant red art and dignified architecture can lend to the devotional spirit. The chapel was densely thronged by a congregation representing all classes of the community, including many poverty-stricken women, whose thin, worn faces, beamed with the lines of care, bore an expression of rapt devotion. At other Catholic churches in the city could be witnessed the same scene."

RELAXATION SUNDAY AFTERNOONS

"Sunday afternoon is given up to relaxation. All the shops remain closed, but the streets are thronged with people, and it is a favorite time for demonstrations and processions. On this particular Sunday the 'Irish Language Society' had a popular festival. A long and variegated procession struggled in picturesque disorder through the main streets to the music of many bands, bearing aloft highly-colored banners, some inscribed with cabalistic signs in the Esse characters, which, it is safe to say, not one person in a thousand of the onlookers could decipher. There is a genuine revival of interest in the old native language. It is part of that natural renaissance, the workings of whose mighty spirit can be seen in many directions. If the effort to reconstitute the Irish language represents the idealistic side of the nation, the working of the spirit is seen in the practical side. Men of all creeds are co-operating in this truly blessed work."

IN BELFAST

Writing from Belfast, the same correspondent says: "The new unifying influences at work in Ireland are producing a powerful effect, even in Belfast. This great center of the Unionist movement, where the Home Rule, but it has made up its mind that Home Rule is inevitable. Many Belfast Unionists are beginning to feel the spell of the national spirit of national unity, which is effecting such a wonderful transformation in Ireland."

"The mass of the Protestant population remains hostile to Home Rule, but it is now a very vague and indeterminate hostility, due more to habit of mind than reasoned conviction. Those avowed of extreme views and light, Sir Edward Carson and F. E. Smith, are to address a great demonstration of Orangemen in Belfast. There will be the usual flamboyant rhetoric, and much beating of the drum. After this Belfast will go about its business in its usual eager, methodical way, little perturbed by the fears conjured up."

Daily Hints For the Cook

TOMATO OMELET.

Break six eggs into a bowl, add pepper and salt, and stir with a fork so as to break the yolks and mix them thoroughly with the whites. Add a drop of water. Do not beat long. Melt an ounce of butter in the frying-pan. Have some sliced tomatoes sautéed in butter and stir these into the omelet. Pour the egg mixture into the hot frying-pan and let it cook over the fire, watching it closely and detaching the edge of the omelet from the sides of the pan. Before the eggs are set transfer it to a hot platter, folding the omelet over as you do so, to have it oval.

SOMETHING BACK OF IT.

"I'll never marry. He's an embittered old bachelor."

"Yes; he's so thoroughly embittered that I think he must have murdered his wife before."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

If you have another man's umbrella he is at least entitled to your sympathy. Laws for the compulsory segregation of that

COMPULSORY SEGREGATION OF FEEDLE MINDED PUPILS

A Toronto Case Cited in Support of Contention for Provincial Law

"In Toronto is a girl eleven years of age who has never been to school. She has no use of arms or legs. An operation would probably enable her to walk. Her mother will not permit an operation."

On the table in the office of Dr. Struthers, chief medical inspector of public schools, lies this report. Inspectors, nurses and workers in charitable organizations have vainly tried to persuade the mother to permit an operation.

"This is an instance," said Dr. Struthers, "of the parent refusing interference with the responsibility of a child that will never have any sense of responsibility; and of the inability of the provincial laws to compel the parent to have the child given surgical treatment and to be cared for in an institution."

Provincial laws provide for the segregation of the insane, the criminal, and the idiot; but as yet the segregation of the feeble-minded is not compulsory, and is as yet unprovided for.

"Yet reproduction of that class of the feeble-minded that may never have the sense of responsibility is equally as inimical to the state and good citizenship as is the reproduction of the insane, the criminal or the idiot."

"With no provision in the provincial laws for the compulsory segregation of that class of the feeble-minded that will never have the sense of responsibility, there remains practically a barrier to establishing a proper system for caring for the mentally defective in the city schools."

"Until the provincial laws compel the segregation of mentally defective children, parents will continue to refuse permission to place that class of children in institutions, and the evil of reproduction of that class will not abate."

"Experience in the care of mentally defective children is proving that in cases where sense of responsibility is lacking, tuition in public school classes will not restore those children to normal mentality. It becomes, therefore, a necessity to segregate those children in institutions."

"Nearly all the cases of mental defectiveness in pupils of the city schools are those where sense of responsibility of citizenship will ever be lacking. To attempt to deal with these cases without the necessary provincial laws, would be futile."

"All positive tests for grades of mental defectiveness in school children are, at the earliest, in the period between six and eight years of age, and more particularly at seven years of age, the time when segregation would be least distressful to the child."

King and Queen to Austria

London, Oct. 13.—King George, early next year, accompanied by Her Majesty the queen, will pay an official visit to the Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria. It is probable, though not certain, that they will afterwards pay a visit to the German Emperor.

Many a man apparently goes to pieces before he is broke.
