It supplies a necessity of life.

Its income is stable and nonductuating, and the number of its selephones may increase largely and steadily.

It does not have to move its exchange because of a change in the business center of a city.

It is easy for it to extend its cables to supply increased demands.

A large proportion of its property may be economically shifted to meet varying public needs, and new lines begin to earn money before the bills for labor and material are due.

It does not make things to sell, and therefore carries no large stock of goods, nor does it need to hold idle vast quantities of raw material.
