HUMOROUS.

A word to the wise is sufficient. A minister made an interminable call upon a lady of his acquaintance. Her little daughter, who was present, grew weary of his con-versation, and whispered in an audible tone, "Didn't he bring his amen with him, mamma?"

One of the humors of last April fool's day in New York was the appearance of a stalwart man, over six feet high, walking down Broadway with a piece of white paper about two feet square pinned to his coat-tail, bearing the legend: "Charlie Ross found at last."

No matter how indulgent a man may be, no matter how sweet a disposition he may have, he will feel considerably put out, if not totally wild, when he discovers that his wife has been driving nails in the wall with his raisor-strop.

The editor presented a bill for eight years' back subscription. The old fellow was first amazed, then indignant. He put on his spectacles, scrutinized the bill, and after assuring himself that it was genuine, he exclaimed, "I've been supportin' this yere paper for nigh onto eight years, and yere paper for nigh onto eight years, and I never had no such thing as that flung at me. I'll stop supportin' it." He not only withdrew his valuable support, but failed to pay the bill.

Senator Lamar, while stumping his State, senator Lamar, while stumping his State, came across a pretty country girl, and began scraping an acquaintance with her by telling her that her eyes were lovely. She returned the compliment, telling him that his were handsome. "Oh," said he, "you are quick on the reply." "Yes. Do you think that when you give me soft soap I can't give you back some of the suds?"

A clergyman at a Methodist camp-meet-A clergyman at a Methodist camp-meeting at Bucyrus, Ohio, prayed that God would kill one member of eyery anti-Christian family in the county. This excited the wrath of the sinners in the congregation, and they tore down the tent, whipped the minister, and would have tarred and feathered him if he had not

At a legal investigation of a liquor seiz ure the Judge asked an unwilling witness: "What was in the barrel that you had?" The reply was: "well, your Honor, it was marked 'whisky' on one end of the barrel, and 'Pat Duffey' on the other end, so I can't say whether it was whisky or Pat Duffey in the barrel, being as I am on my oath."

who invariably throws away an old quid whenever he sees a neighbor take out a tobacco box, waited in vain one morning for an exchange of hospitalities. "Aren't you going to give me a chew?" he enquired. "Didn't you have one in your mouth?" asked the market man. "Yes," said the other. "Well," replied the market man, "you must learn never to throw away a certainty for anuncertainty."

The King and the Care.

The King and the Capuchin.

The Italians tell many a good story about the witty sayings and clever doings of Capuchin Friars, and indeed of Franciscans in general. I read of one which ought not, I think, to be allowed to go into oblivion. The story is told as follows:

Frederick the Great of Prussia paid a visit to Silesia shortly after having annexed that province to his dominions. Now it happened that in those parts there was a certain convent of Capuchins. there was a certain convent of Capuchins. The superior went with one of his religious to present his respects to his new sovereign, and beg his royal protection for the community over which the worthy Father Guardian presided. When the Capuchin was announced the king was in his calvingt in conversation with his his cabinet in conversation with his brother. Frederick exclaimed, "Show the friar in—I mean have some fun out of this Capuchin."

His brother warned him that he had a

His brother warned him that he had a friar to deal with, and to take care that, if he began with his bantering, he did not get the worst of it. The triar was admitted. He presented himself with all the respect due to his sovereign, and said that he could not allow his majesty's first visit to that province to pass by without coming to wait on his new sovereign, to testify his loyalty and devoted attachment to his royal person, in his own name and that of his religious community. He also recommended his convent to the protection of his new monarch.

The king hastened to reassure him on this point, and then went on immediately with an air of affected simplicity and goodnatured openness to say:

but, in good lather, tell me, is it really true that you Capuchins send your novices out to water the kitchen-garden when it is raining; and to plant cabbages with the heads down and the roots in the air; and make them go and eat their dinner with the cat in the middle of the floor? Is all that true.

Voltare, still with all humility explained to his majesty that to enter an order like that of the Capuchins, it was necessary to ascertain whether a novice could lead a life of mortification, humility, obedience, life of mortification, humility, obedience, asserting the control of the capuchins of the control of the senson of 18th.

etc., and fulfil the duties of a religious of St. Francis. While the worthy friar was explaining matters to the king, a donkey down in the yard began braying loudly, and was immediately answered by another that was there.

The king at this interrupted the Capuchin, assuring him that he had now a very high opinion indeed of the Capuchin Order, and to give him an unmistakable mark of his esteem, he was determined to send two personages of his court to enter that order. The Capuchin knew he meant the two donkeys in the courtyard, but he dissimulated completely, and, with perfect gravity and a most respectful air, thanked his majesty for the signal honor he was going to confer on the Seraphic Order; and he promised, as a mark of his deep gratitude for so distinguished a favor, that he would bestow his majesty's name on one of these novices, majesty's name on one of these novices, and on the other the name of the Serene Prince, his majesty's brother. And so saying, he made his bow and took his leparture.

"Did I not tell you to leave that friar alone?" This was all the consolation the alone?" This was all the consolation the baffled monarch got from his royal brother.—The Lamp.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it.acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affecstant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs. As a safeguard to children, amid the distress-
