This white leaved flower with heart of gold Delighted Homer long ago; Yet nature thinks it not so old But that it still with grace may grow. But, of the flower may bloom answ, May, of the flower may bloom answ, May not the flower's old legend too?

bere was a fountain, and around Flowers and grass made happy ground and tail trees kept it cool and clear to crue beast or bird came near; and never leaf or blussom fell, to mar that wonderful bright well.

Mere many a slumbrous Summer day
Marcissus came, and as he lay
Among the flowers and cool green grass,
He gazed and saw, as in a glass,
A beautiful gold-clustered head,
A bright young face of white and red,
Which, when he smiled, smiled back,

when,
He fell a weeping, wept again.
Often he leaned and sought to hise
The sweet mouth litted up to his;
and often tried to cleap and draw
Within his arms the shape he saw.

Here grieving many a Summer day, He drooped and slowly pined away; Then died of love. When he was dead, "His celf-love killed him." people said; "That pretty face of his, 'its plain. Brought him but little good or gain!"

Alse! how easily both good
And evil are misunderstood:
That which is best in us men blame!
They praise—and flush our cheeks we shame!
In that clear spring among the trees
"Its not himself Narcissus sees
Ah, no; self-worship no'er could show
Such ecstacy of joy and woe.
Who is it, then, he bends above
With tears so wild, such yearning love?
Whom does he strive to cleap and kies?
Whom oes he strive to cleap and kies?

That darling face, that gold-ouried head, Are not the living but the dead, The lad's fair image is a maid—His sweet twin sister, who was laid Last year beneath the lier shade. The white anow fell, the cold wind b'ew, The flowers died and she died too.

From babyhood they less had been Like twins than like one doubly seen, They were so favored and so fair That song and echo never were, Nor morning star and evening star, More magically similar.

And so, unhappy and belied,
Narcisms pined and drooped and died;
Yet died not wholly—he became
The golden flower which bears his name,
And surely never flower grow
From heart more tender or more true,
Nor blossomed one from human moid,
More like to have a heart of gold.

O world, let love so slandered teach Thy babbling tongue more kindly speech

INTERESTING MISCELLANY.

Alexander Pope, the poet, and translator of Homer's Iliad, was a most dutiful and affectionate son. His mother lived to an extreme old age, tenderly carefor by him. He was never long absent from her, and his references to her in his letters to Dean Swift and others of his steady are uniformly tender and heauti. friends are uniformly tender and beautiful. Her spelling was none of the best; in fact the dear old lady did not know how to spell any better than the average Esglishwoman of her day, who spelt very badly indeed. But her son knew how great pleasure it would give her to assist him in work, to feel that she was a help to him, and so he often gave her portions of his translations of the Illad to copy out. The necessary correction of her work gave infinite trouble to him and his policy and the policy of the policy work gave infinite trouble to him and his printers, and really took more time than the copying out would have done. But he had given her a pleasure, and no trouble was too much for that. After her death he wrote to the painter, Richardson, to come and take a sketch of her in her last sleep. "I shall hope to see you this evening, as late as you will, or to-morrow morning as early, before this winter flower is faded," he writes.

The Annuaire des Missions gives a complete report of the wondrous pro-timed, "shows that you have talent;"

The Annuaire des Missions gives a complete report of the wondrous progress which the Church continues to make in our missionary countries. The wise and firm direction of Leo XIII., his gifts to Propagands, the renewed impulse which he has given to the work of the apostolate, work of the Unistian apostolate is the in-dispensible guarantee of civilization. As one of the English governors of India recently expressed it, "The missions have done most toward extending the ir fluence of Europe over India than all the laboraof the Eaglish administration." And this testimony is that of all colonizers. The day will come when, tired of religious per secution, governments will offer great re wards to those orders and communities who will send subjects to engage in mis-sionary labors. At the same time this consoling progress attending missionary work should serve to etimulate the gener-cety and piety of the faithful every-where in contributing to the Society of the Propagation of the Faith.

THE TRUE FRIEND OF THE POOR. "Every saint has his special conformity to our Divine Master," says His Eminence Cardinal Manning, "but St. Franc's seems to be the express likeness of Jesus conto be the express likeness of Jesus con-versing among men in the mountains and plains of Galilee and Jucas, intensely human in all sympathy with the people; but mysteriously divine his words and actions. He was the friend of the poor; but mysteriously divine his words and actions. He was the friend of the poor; poor himself; with a poverty greater than theirs; and the poor of the world have been his special inheritance; and the rich of the world have made themselves poor in spirit or in truth to join themselves to him. In all lands, of all languages, in every state of life, the Franciscan type is all the same. Poverty of spirit, love of the poor, tenderness towards all suffering, joy in all the works of creation, humility of heart, unworldliness in the throng and furnace of the world, self concealing piety, and a stlent fervor, always aspiring to closer conformity with the humility and charity of Jesus Christ.

"NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE." Sarah Flower, the writer of this touch Sarah Flower, the writer of this touching hymn, was worthy of the name, for Sarah signifies a princess, and sweeter fragrance has rarely exuded from any flower in the garden. Sarah signifies a princess, and sweeter fragrance has rarely exuded from any finwer in the garden. The glitted dril married Mr. William B. Adams, an English civil engineer, of superior abilities. She was of frail constitution, and, amid many bodily sufferings, she kept her pen at work on various poetical productions. At what time she caught the inspiration to compose that one immortal hymn, which is now sung around the globe, we have never learned. Probably it was some reason of peculiar trial, when the bruised spirit emitted the odor of a child-like submission to a chastening father. It must have oczad from a bleeding heart. It must have occad from a bleeding heart. Her hymn first appeared in a volume of sacred lyrics by Mr. Fox, in England, about the year 1841. The authorees did not live to catch the fame it was to bring, for she died in 1846, aged twenty-four years. She was buried near Marlow, in Essex. Presently the hymn began to work its way into various collections of songs. It was married to the tune of "Bethany," and everybody caught the strain.

A WIFTY ANSWER.

This is General Sherman's story of how an Irish soldier saved his own life by his wit. "General Thomas," said he: "j unior to me in rank, but senior in service, was a stern disciplinarian. He had received many complaints about the pilifering and plundering committed by one of his brigades, and, being resolved to put this offence down, he issued some very strict orders, menacing with death any one who should transgress. The brigade in question wore for its badge an accorn, in silver or gold, and the men were inordinately proud of this distinctive sign. Several cases of disobedience had been reported to the General, but the evidence was never strong enough for decisive action, until one day, riding with an orderly down a by-lane outside the posts, Thomas came full upon an Irishman, who having laid aside his rifis, with which he had killed a hog, was busily engaged in skinning the animal with his sword-bayonet, so as to make easy work with the bristles, etc. before cooking some pork chops, 'Ah,' cried the General, 'you rasca!! at last I have caught one of you in the act. There is no mistake about it this time, and I cried the General, 'you rascai! at last I have caught one of you in the act. There is no mistake about it this time, and I will make an example of you, sir?' 'Bedad! General, honey!' said the Irishman, straightening himself up and coming to the salute, 'it's not shooting me that you ought to be at, but rewardin' me.' 'What do you mean, sir?' exclaimed General Thomas 'Why, your honor!' the soldier replied, 'this bad baste here had just been discratin' the rigimintal badge, and so I was forced to dispatch him. It's atin' the acorns that I found him at!' Even General Thomas was obliged to laugh at this and the soldier saved his life by his wit."

MURILLO'S SLAVE. MURILLO'S SLAVE.

Sebastian Gomez was a mulatto boy employed in the studio of Marillo, the great Spanish painter. He and his father were both slaves. He slept in the studio at night, and after all others were gone, he was accustomed to rise and practice what he had overheard of the instructions given to the pupils during the day. A wonderful picture of the Blessed Virgin was found there one morning, at sight of which Murillo was loet in admiration. But no one could tell by whom it was which Murillo was lost in admiration.
But no one could tell by whom it was done; no one suspected the mulatto boy.
One night, however, Sebastian becsme so absorbed in his painting that he continued until morning, when Murillo entered the studio and found him at work. Eatranced with the picture, he promised the slave boy whatever he would sak.
At these words Sebastian uttered a cry of iv. and raising his eves to his master.

tinued, "shows that you have talent; your request proves that you have a heart. From this day consider yourself not only my pupil but as my son. I have done more than paint—I have made a painter."

Murillo kept his word, and Sebastian Gomez, better known under the name of the mulatto of Murillo, became one of the most celebrated painters in Spain. There may yet he seen in the churches of PELISSIER'S DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY. The famous French general, Marshal Pelissier, like all great minds united to noble hearts, showed through the course of his life, in all his important undertakings, the influence of the deeply religious sentinents with which he was animated. And ments with which he was animated. And in return, therefore, he has the happiness on his death-bed of being surrounded by all the consolations of religion. One in-cident in particular is told of him which all the consolations of religion. One incident in particular is told of him which gave a striking proof of his devotion to the Bleesed Virgin. It happened in the Crimea in 1855. A final council of war had been held, and the commanding general, Pelissier, had decided that an attack should be made on Sebastopol on the 8th of September. When the council was over one of the French generals called upon Pelissier and urged him to select another day for making the assault. He remarked that the 8th of September was the feast of the Nativity of the Mother of God, and perhaps the English would see in the selection of that day an evidence of Paplat superatition, and it would be better not to expose the French army to the represent of bigotry.

"Let me alone!" bruskly replied Ganeral Pelissier. "If the English do not love the Blessed Virgin, so much the worse for them. A King of France has consecrated our bountry to Mary and I am going to devote to our good mother the French army which I command. The day has been chosen advisedly—the attack on Sebastopol will be made on the feast of the Nativity of Our Biessed Ludy."

And so it was, and a glortous victory crowned the French arms on the 8th of September, 1855.

A MYSTERIOUS INCIDENT.

A MYSTERIOUS INCIDENT. A well known photographer will vouch for the following facts: He was called in his lens and took the photograph. During the ten minutes needed for the exposure, the photographer passed up and down in the long cyridor outside the room where the dead girl lay. When he returned he saw that on the lid of the coffin was a flower, which was not so before. How did that flywer come there? No one had entered the room; the windows were closed, and there was not a breath of air stirring. Why was the flower now lying on the coffin, when a few minutes before it was on the bed between the hands of the corpse? The photographer listened, but he could hear no sound except the besting of his own heart. In a few moment, however, he determined to disrules the question from his mind, and busied himself with packing up his instrument. Then he paused—possibly the falling flywer had left a trace on the negative, or, as the day was gloomy, the photograph might not be quite successful. He would try again. A second photograph was taken, and the artist returned nome. That night, sitting up late in his studio, he developed the two negatives. The photographer studio, he developed the two negatives.

The position of the corpse was not the same in the two negatives. The photographer strained his eyes, half disbelleving the evidence of his own senses, but there were the two negatives before him telling in unmistakable truthfulness, that between the taking of the two photographs the arm of the dead girl had distinctly moved The mystery of the flower on the coffin was solved, but it was succeeded by a mystery more terrible still. The two negatives may now be seen and compared at Mr.: Barraud's studio in Oxford-street.—

CATHOLIC EDUCATION IN SEPAR-

God, in creating man, breathed into him a soul endowed with intellectual faculties, which were to be developed by application to the various sources of knowledge. Now, since God is the source of all knowledge, it follows that the study of the things appertaining to God should be preminent. The imagination and the heart are great factors in the cultivation of the intellect, a fact well recognized by the Church. the Church,
We inherit original sin, which "darkens

our understanding and weakens our will," hence it is necessary to be in a manner emancipated from the slavery of our weak nature ere our intellects are illumined. Divine grace, the channels of weak nature ere our intellets are illumined. Divine grace, the channels of which are the sacraments, is the only means to this end; thus it is obvious that Catholic education is necessary not only for our moral well-being but for our in tellectual also. The affections of the child are directed to love and to have confidence in God; then step by step his intellect is appealed to the great mysteries of the Trinity, of the Unity, of the Incarnation, death and resurrection of Jesus are laid before him, and his gift of faith helps him to exclaim, "I believe." Then is he taught to go to confession, and this beautiful practice of humility helps to correct his little failings. Gradually his intellect becomes less obscured, his imagination is, as it were, set free and, no longer a prisoner by the obscurity of the intellect, soars into the realms of science. Here the mind, aided by the imagination and the religious instinct, assimilates all congenial knowledge, and the powers of the mind are fully developed. If the Church, which has ever patronized science and art, have not a better system of educating man, as divinely constructed, than those outside her pale, we know of none equal to it! Above all her children are pre eminent for their charity—charity that is not pharisalcal but ever patient, kind and Above all her children are pre-eminent for their charity—charity that is not pharisaical but ever patient, kind and loving! It is necessary that our children should be educated under the auspices of Catholic tuition or in Separate schools in order to imbibe a Catholic spirit. The spirit of the age among the rising generation, especially among Protestants, is a pernicious one; it is the spirit of pride and many are the evils that result therefrom. This is the spirit that prompts the youth to he has given to the work of the apostolate, the establishment of international centres at Rome, his influence upon European politics—these have formed so many extrinsic causes accelerating and extending the spread of Catholicity in pagan countries. And this growth is destined to become deeper and wider. The powers of the world are beginning to realize that the work of the Christian apostolate is the inare taught reverence, not contempt, noble submission, not disregard of authority. If the State understood the benefits of Catholic education, it would never en-croach on its advantages, but should in crease them and it would find less scope for the administration of justice than now, for Catholic education inculcates above all respect for the laws of the State when in accordance with the laws of God, love and reverence at home and the exercise of and reverence at home and the exercise of kindness and justice toward the neighbor. Thus a Separate school child is taught to become a help to the State by being an upright, honorable citizen, using the talents given him by God for his own maintenance, the welfare of his country and the good of his fellowmen.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND TOT-

The clergy of the Established Church in Scotland have become greatly alarmed at the rapidly growing agitation for dis-establishment. They protest vehement-ly against leaving the Church by law established to stand on its own merits established to stand on its own merits unassisted by the enforced contributions of unbelievers. They maintain that the agreement of the Government to maintain the Established Church in Scotland was a vital and essential part of the Act of Union with Scotland and that it would be a violation of that Act of Union to abandon the Church to its own resources. It will necessarily develop into a political issue in the early future, and it would be contrary to the logic of history to predict any other final outcome of the agitation but that the Church will be disestablished in Scotland as it was in be disestablished in Scotland as it was in be disestablished in Scotland as it was in Ireland. The older members of the clergy established by law in comfortable livings may perhaps remain possessed of their time-honored special privileges, but it is extremely doubtful if they will be per-mitted to transmit them to their children.
