

Of ill health, despondency and despair, gives way to the sunshine of hope, happiness and health, upon taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it gives renewed life and vitality to the blood, and through and through nerve stren and energy body. Read "Hood's Sar helped me wonderfully, changed sickness to health, gloom to sun-bing. No ran art to the whole that imparts shine. No pen can describe what I suf-fered. I was deathly sick, had sick headaches every few days and those terrible tired, despondent feelings, with heart troubles so that I could not go up and over my heart and resting. In fact, it would almost take my breath away. I suffered so I did not care to live, yet I had much to live for. There is no pleasure in life if deprived of health, for life become a burden. Hood's Sarsaparilla does fa more than advertised. After taking one bottle, it is sufficient to recommend itself." MRS. J. E. SMITH, Beloit, Iowa.

French Bordeaux Clarets JAMES WILSON 393 Richmond St., London. 'Phone 650.

MARCELLA GRACE. BY ROSA MULHOLLAND.

CHAPTER I.

HER MOTHER WAS A LADY. In that part of Dublin known as the Liberties there lived an old man called Grace, with his daughter Marcella. The father, though an educated son of And why should she not do so, since the people, had seen better days, had once been a master-weaver, and had married a lady. But the daughter never had seen better days, her mother, her mother was a lady? In the girl's simple superiority there was little that could offend even the most envious or ill-conditioned. In spite of her unusual beauty she never interfered with the lovers of other girls; never had had one herself and the lady, had been dead before she could walk, and all the good times were gone before she had sense to be aware of their existence. The old man had of late years gradually sunk to his original level, and consoled himself she was useful to the mothers as a model to be held up to the daughters. with a single loom and his pipe ; and the daughter, while mending his clothes and striving to make him com-fortable, had somehow grown into a woman. They lived in a quaint old part of the Liberties, called Weaver's Square, a spot that reminded one of a dilapidated nook of some ancient foreign town, for the houses, of a dark brick. were built with high-peaked fronts, and flat, narrow windows, and had peculiar-ities of their own which marked them as of a different quality from the ruder and uglier dwellings that surrounded them. It was a place inhabited by poplin weavers ever since the establish ent of the trade in the neighborhood, by Huguenot settlers in the olden time. Tabinet weaving, once a flourishing art, is now on the wane and threaten ing to decay. Michael Grace had gone down with the trade, and was now dragged lower every day by the increasing infirmities of years

The house in which they lived stood at the entrance to the square, and was larger than the cost, with some heavy stone-carving about the hall-door, and massive sills to the windows. The dwelling had probably been at one time the country house of gentlefolk, and had got built up to, and walled around, and had found itself caught in network of foul streets, and long left behind by its old frequenters. With the perpetual frown under its windows and the streams of damp on its walls it had a brooding, weeping look, which seemed ever to deplore its reverse of fortune. In his palmy days, Grace had bought the old house, and furnished it in a manner which he had considered splendid ; and here he had brought his wife, who had never, certainly, seen the neighborhood before, who probably had not liked it, and who here had died. Marcella had been born in the house, and there was something about its as pect which seemed to harmonize with the character of the girl. In spite of its sad and lonesome air, it had also its gracious aspect, and held the same re ation to the other houses in the streets that Marcella occupied among the people, being one of themselves, though standing a little apart, and, undoubt-edly, a good deal the pride, and slightly the envy of its neighbors. Its glory was a thing of the past, like the good fortune of the Graces, for it had become so dilapidated that it was with difficulty the weaver and his daughter were able to make their home in a cor ner of it.

Yet, in spite of all difficulties, Marbusy looms. But he was old now, and cella, by virtue of some gift in her eyes he had his pipe. Could he but live and fingers, contrived to make the dingly place something a little different without toiling, he were content. was slow getting money out of yonder from the ordinary of such homes. Strips of old amber tabinet, much faded weary old loom ; but Marcella, the girl there, knew more about money with frequent cleaning, hanging by the window, and other such contriv-ances, gave the room she lived in a character of its own. She would go character of its own. She would go deed, he would be glad of her and member the little lady you fell in love Shuddering over the announcement bunch of vellow spring flowers to place proud of her. But no; he never had wid at the Pathrick's ball? Well, she's her father had just made, of his in the brown pitcher, which was the best vase she could find, on the corner of the dark old loom that caught the sunlight as it fell through the window. Her floor was scrupulously sanded, and her fireside bright and swept. Neigh-bors who came to ask her help or advice could not tell what it was that made the old weaver's room so home like. The walls were as crooked as other folk' walls, the ceiling as dark with age and smoke, and the light as scant, for it was not in the handsome rooms of his house that he harbored in his latter days, nor had the Graces preserved any smart pieces of furniture to show that they had come down in the world. Housewives of the decenter order came and went away again per plexed. There was something in old Grace's room which they could not describe, and which they did not see when they went home. Even from the outside, Marcella's window, when she happened to stand by it, would strike a stranger who might happen to be peering about the ancient street, and might wake in him -if he happened to be imaginative and a traveller-a memory of Italy. He had seen a richly tinted face, a dark, picturesque head, like the head of a Roman girl framed in a queer wormeaten window frame based by a sill with faatastic carving, and behind it a glow of yellow drapery had shone dimly through the shadows and glinted into the light. And if it chanced to be sunset hour, when the sunshine would suddenly cover one strip of the house, like the unfurling of a long red banner against the time darkened walls, then unsuspected hues would come out of the weather stained bricks, enhanced by the intensified shadows under the sullen brown window frame, and in the angrily. cavernous chambers behind the sashes. Certainly the Graces' room would not have been a cheerful one if any one

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

which was no better than their own

least of all, the latter feeling awed by her gravity, and by a certain invol-

A damp winter afternoon was the gloom, making the silent loom look like some ungainly ogre who was try ing, vainly, to hide himself in the shadows of the corner.

straightened her limbs, which were stiffened with the fatigue of sitting morning and had earned a shilling.

anxiously for her father coming home

had he always forbidden her to learn at an enemy with whom she was powerless to grapple; while she thought of her terrible helplessness as a woman, and the urgent need of aid and more as the days went by, and her father grew less inclined to work.

And then the door opened and Michael

Grace came in, and sat down at the

were to cost him much effort.

from some quarter which she felt more

She had been at work since springing up in the windows.

her presence

still.

fire.

flame. The better class of neighbors were aware of this, and would have drew away his pipe, and made a conbeen sorry to see her depart : for temptuous flourish with his hand. though she did stand a little aloof from "Your mother was a lady, girl. Rethem, it was only a little. Were any member that. one sick or in trouble, Marcella forgot Marcella had heard such an answer before. She had spoken on the subher reserve. She was a credit to the street when she went out to do her ject many times : maybe once too often, scanty bit of marketing, for she walked for she was silent now." with the step of a lady, in her bonnet,

"Ay," echoed the weaver, " she was a rale lady. No better blood ever danced a Patrick's dance in the four old walls of the Castle yonder-black as it is wid the age, and big as it is wid the size. It was a Patrick's Night that I seen her the first."

" My masther had an order on hands of blue tabinet for Her Excellencyess the Lady Liftenant. Holiday as it was, seemed willing to have none. Then I had to stay at the finishing of it. worked very hard to get the evenin to myself ; but it was far in the night Sometimes young wives did not like having her thrift thrust in their teeth when the parcel was ready. 'Well, well,' I said, 'I'll just take the bundle in my hands, and go up to the Castle at the wanst wid it. An' maybe Molly Sullivan'll contrive to by cross husbands : but on the whole she was popular. The very old men liked her the best, and the young men get me a sight of the quality at their dancin'. Molly was a tidy little maid at the Castle, an' there's little she untary haughtiness in the carriage of her head which made them humble and wouldn't ha done for me at the time.' "It's myself that's in the right, for awkward when (as on rare occasions) they happened to find themselves in Molly found me a peep-hole. At first I could see an' hear nothing, the whole place was in wan uproar of splendor. closing, the thick yellow daylight fad-ing in the street, and dingy lights The music was fit to make your heart burst in two halves wid the delight. Molly said they were dancin' but I only saw the ladies sailin' up an' down the In the weaver's room dusk was shifting gradually along the walls and through the room like swans in a river, an' the panes, and, seeing it depart, a small gentlemen follyin' them and meetin' fire began to find courage to burn, and darted little javelins of flame into them, and bowin' to them.

"I was hardly drawing my breath wid admiration when my eyes lit on wan little face; an' never could they leave it the rest of the time. She was shy and frightened lookin' someways

Marcella put down her sewing, and -Molly said because it was her first Castle ball. She was as beautiful as a fairy, an' as happy as a queen. I thought she had the purtiest pair of eyes that ever were planted in any She peered out before drawing the mortal head. An' she was dressed all curtain across the window, looking out in white, wid a long poplin train an' what but Michael should set about There was poplin on the loom which ought to be finished to morrow. Why thinkin' maybe 'twas his hands that wove the very piece ! Molly knew all about her : in the regard of her sister to do this work? She stood before the being the little jewel's maid. "I went home that night grumblin" loom gazing at it with bent brows, as to myself because I wasn't a gentleman; that I couldn't wear a uniform, nor ruffles, nor silk stockings; for then I might ha' been leadin' her about as proud as e'er a wan o' them, an' bowin to her, an' meetin' her, an' follyin' her through the crowd. But in a few through the crowd. But in a few days I forgot about it all. Times took a good turn wid me, an' my head was full o' the lucre o' the world.

He was a tall old man, with arms "Five or six years went by, an' I that seemed loose at the joints, long had got to be a master-weaver. I had ragged features, and an indolent, not taken this ould house, the best in the street, an' made it look tidy, an' furill humored expression of countenance. but with a warning spark smouldering nished it up handsome. An' it's little in the corner of his eye which might easily be quickened into anger. He I thought who I was doing it for. An when it was finished there was some-thin' the matter wid me. An' wan day looked like one who would do a good turn if it cost him no trouble, but who the truth hit me hard ; an' I says to my self, 'Michael Grace,' says I, 'you're a lonesome man!' An' then an order would shirk a burden if he could. The world might slip away from his came in, an' I forgot about it again. large limp hands if the holding it fast An' that same day I was walkin' down the street, an' who should I light upon And it had slipped away from him, taking with it his comfortable house, his but little Molly Sullivan. workmen, his mastership, and many

"" Well, well, Misther Grace !' said she; 'but it's you has got up in the world since the Pathrick's night when ye came up to the castle wid the poplin.

It

" 'It's thrue for you, Molly,' said I, an' I hope things goes aiqually as well than he did. She contrived his cup of tea and his tobacco. Could her magic but reach the length of providing for Molly; 'but it's badly the times has herself and her old father, then in- gone wid some since then. Do you re-

"A trade ! Puff !" The old man fancy seen that pretty girl-lady, her mother, dancing in glee, among her peers, at the great Castle ball. Of Patrick nights, when the carriages were rolling to the Castle, she had sat late over her fire and studied the brilliant picture. Very dazzling were the lights, very gloomy the shades; and Marcella's thoughtful eyes had marked them all.

> Many a time, too, had she lingered. passing the old house before entering it. She had peered in at the windows, it. and had seen the gentle creature with her baby in her arms. Up and down she had seen her pacing softly, pondering in mild amazement the sadness of the changes in her life. So this mother was like a dream or a story, but with a difference. In passing away she had left something behind her. Her strange little fate had made a mark upon her narrow bit of world : an unusual mark which would be seen and recognized. She had left a nature with her daughter which was foreign to the class to which that daughter must belong. And this Marcella had observed in her own untutored way.

"So that bein' the story of your mother," said the weaver, "never spake again about learnin' a thrade. I'll settle you like a lady in a house of your own, an' Michael will have a seat in the chimney corner."

"Father !" cried Marcella, startled out of her dream.

"Buy yourself a ribbon, and begin to look handsome," he went on, "for I've made a fine match for you. And I'll weave you a weddin' gown that'll stand alone.

Marcella sprang forward and stood trembling before him. "Oh, no, father ! I will not have that !" she cried hastily.

The weaver took his pipe out of hi mouth and stared at her. How hand-some she looked, even when she was a bit troublesome, like this. It was well she was, or the well-to do grocer on the quay would never have taken a fancy to her, as she stepped out of the chapel-door on Sundays. "Not have what?" he asked, peevishly. "Maybe ye'd like a thrade to work at' bether nor a husband to airn for ye?"

I would," said Marcella, eagerly. "Ye're a fool," shouted the weaver. ' and ye'll go to the poor house ! It's the cursed proud blood of strangers that's workin' in ye, settin' ye against the biddin' of yer father !"

Michael was angered and disap pointed in his daughter. Would any other girl in the world not have been thoroughly charmed with his plan? But there was always a queer turn in her, wherever she came from. Her eyes might be like her mother's, now when they had tears in them, but it was not her mother's humble spirit that had looked out of them a minute ago. He got up impatiently, knocked the ashes out of his pipe, and went off to bed in a sulk, leaving a frightened, aching heart, and the unfinished tabinet behind him.

Marcella lit the poor but neatly trimmed lamp, and unfolded a new piece of sewing. It was still early in the night, and she could, perhaps, earn sixpence before the great bell of St. Patrick's Cathedral should boom forth, calling the hour of midnight over the city. And meantime she could give herself up to her own sad and speculating thoughts, undisturbed except by the occasional too-familian sounds of quarrelling in the streets, as men and women, turned out of the late-closing taverns in the neighborhood, passed under the window, on their way to wretched homes.

the poor people around her, but they were not of her class, and she was no of theirs. She could help them, sympathize with them, pity them, she could not take a husband of their Dropping her work and covering

her face with her hands, she gave way misfortune that her birthright of re solitude that it laid upon her. Must en

JUNE 20, 1896.

most ladies (though of that she knew nothing), and had read and re-read the few treasured books which her mother had left behind her, and which the weaver had always preserved with a sort of superstitious reverence. The "Imitation of Christ," Wordsworth's Poems, and a New Testament were the staple of Marcella's library.

Though her fingers were naturally clever at putting feminine odds and ends together, she had received no teaching to enable her to be a dressmaker or milliner. And who was to support her while she learned such handicrafts, even if she were free to begin now? She knew nothing of artistic work, such as ladies do, and which she had often looked at admiringly in the windows of shops where such things are to be sold.

Her thoughts strayed longingly to wards the convent where she had received her scanty education at a daily school, to the hospital where the bright faced Sisters of Charity pass their days in tending the sick and the dying. Oh, could she be even a lay sister under such a blessed roof ! But how could she hope to be good enough, clever enough, strong enough? at all events, she could not desert her father. She must endure his anger, she must stitch night and day-

A subdued but persistent sound of urgent knocking here interrupted the course of her thoughts. She dropped her work and listened. It was at the street door. Some one was wanting admittance to the house. As she sat listening in absolute wonder, the summons was repeated, softly, rapidly, imploringly.

TO BE CONTINUED.

IS IT A MIRACLE?

The Chicago papers have been filled lately with accounts of the cure of a young French Catholic girl of tubercuosis at the Church of Notre Dame de

The facts seem to be these: The girl's name is Laura Fortin ; she is twenty two years old ; she was at a convent school in Canada when she became fflicted with spinal trouble, was sent home and for the past five years has been a hopeless invalid. Not only has she not walked but she has not been out of her bed. Various physicians who treated her pronounced the disease tuberculosis of the spine, and entirely incurable. Certain joints of the spine weregone, eaten away. Medicine could do much in some cases, but not in this ; it could not replace what had disappeared. One or two of the doctors were honest enough to advise the parents of the girl that money spent on medicine for her was only money thrown away. About the middle of the month Laura Fortin, always most devout and pious, began a novena to Our Lady of Lourdes, trusting that faith would accomplish what medicine had failed She has been a weekly communiin. cant for years, the priest going to her, as she was unable to leave her bed. Or the last day of the novena she was wheeled over to the grotto by the side of the main altar. Mass was said there for her cure, and hundreds of worshippers, seeing the wan face and wasted figure of the girl, prayed that either reief or death might come to her soon. Relief did come. It was almost in-stantaneous. She had no sooner reached home than the limbs that had not moved for years asserted their strength. She rose up and walked, she even ran up and down stairs in joyous greeting of the hundreds of visitors who soon came thronging upon her. Nor was the change a temporary one.

She walked up the middle aisle of the church on Sunday, to the marvel of the

WHEN LUTHER I The Church was the Gre

JUNE 20, 1896.

Agent in Europ

In the preface to a treatise on the "Refo called, a distinguished G iastic discourses very upon the achievements a the Church prior to the Luther and his followers. to a French historian, M visse, this was the cond many at that time : "From the middle of t century, Germany is no anarchical federation of and cities that are republ collective life, no Gern finances, no justice. where, and no longer right but the right of r recht). In order to prote princes and cities for peace, but these leagues warlike, for they make Over this disorder a mon He is always called the at the end of the thirteen the garb of this splendid longer but a petty Ge using his dignity to est tune of his house. The squires of the Ardennes the Hapsburgs, petty h country of Aargau, mak empire for themselves. was the German time, and this country. formidable in the tenth longer but a collectio beings embittered aga other The historical review mentioned gives the fol of the Church's condi hordes of anarchy, un ligion broke loose u Europe: If we take a Church's labors among and Slavic peoples, and the beginning with the tivity in the middle savage and undiscipline ing a regular and mot of society; we observe gress in intelligence, a a complete renewal of manity in all the co carried out under the the education of the soil has been cultiv drained, forests cleare disappeared everywher ical and the natural we The same phenomeno in the moral and inte Minds had been enli ennobled, war had bee ignorance, error and the peoples had been st polished. The whole converted to the do Christ. The new wo numerable tribes of pe unknown, was opened aries of the cross, and Church's activity assur proportions. The dif of Europe were perf the population had merce and industry the states well organi the sciences were ev fresh conquests, and came at the same tin and more brilliant.

Slavery, except in had disappeared, man fied, family life org and knights, city laborers, all condition and strengthened. families, corporation had taken on regul individual felt secur the mass. Everythin ligion ; from her eve its impulse and direct themselves formed a a single head, who father, governed their law of Jesus Christ, hand also kept do peaceful developmen the basis of the resul have the happiest a results. Unfortunately this mal progress was no peoples of Europe. it was impeded by Life itself concealed fresh struggles, othe gathering before t had yet subsided, an more severe, more evils than most of th hitherto. Already the middle ages si presaged a new era principle of autho the Supreme Head been lowered in th princes and peoples lowly, were obedien esteem, and reli threatened by the tendencies. No doubt the Chr still united by indi the destinies of one less influence on another nation : bound them was pu nal, artificial. I the advantages and of things terrestr material activity, ply the relations merce that brough peoples those close cere associations. Among the chan effected we may n of postal routes, in in the reign of 1 Germany by Ma vention of 'gun going to destroy revolutionize the ployment of paid t ation of standin

One of the most instructive and useful pamph lets extant is the lectures of Father Damen They comprise four of the most celebrated ones delivered by that renowned Jesuit Father namely: "The Private Interpretation of the Bible," "The Catholic Church, the only true Church of God," "Confession," and "The Rea Presence." The book will be sent to any ad dress on receipt of 15 cents in stamps. Order may be sent to Thos. Coffey. CATHOLIC RECOLD Office. London.

CONCORDIA VINEYARDS

SANDWICH, ONT. EBNEST GIBADOT & CO Altar Wine a Specialty. Our Altar Wine is extensively used and recommended by the Clergy, and our Clerge will compare favorably with the best im ported Bordeaux. For prices and information address. E. GIRADOT & CO. Sandwich. Ont STAINED GLASS FOR CHURCHES. Best Qualities Only. Prices the Lowest McCAUSLAND & SON 76 King Street West, TORONTO.

DR. WOODRUFF, NO. 185 QUEEN'S AVE Defective vision, impaired heating nasal cataerrh and troublesome thronts. Eye-tested, glasses adjusted. Hours, 12 to 4.

LOVE & DIGNAN, BARRIS (S.S., 10.) 418 Talbot street, London, Private, rdf to Joan fiery way through the Liberties, burn-1 "Father," said she presentling up human life like chaff before did you not give me a trade?

got her taught a trade. Her mother had been a lady; let the world re-member that. His daughter had member that. His daughter had enough to do about her own fireside. He needed his little comforts looked after. Were she to go running about after millinering and dress-making, what kind of life would her old father have at home? Well, well, she had a handsome face. No brighter eyes were to be seen about Dublin. He turned the matter over in his mind. Never fear but she would do her work well some day. Michael Grace lit his pipe and moked, and Marcella stood waiting at the opposite side of the hearth. Should she dare to light the evening lamp? No ; her father might be angry, think ing she wanted him to work

The weaver extended his large feet to the blaze, and smoked with great zest. He was dreaming that he lay at ease in a snug arm chair by the side of a fire that was not likely to go out, and that he had no other duty than to smoke all day long, with a pleasant odor of plentiful food in his atmosphere. Old Michael's castle in the air was a substantial one, and he thought he knew the road to it well.

"I'm gettin' old, my girl, an' I feel myself full of aches and pains. Whisht, now, ye needn't look so scared. It's only ould age that's come down on me. I'm not goin' to be makin' many more gran' gowns for the ladies, an' that's Marcella's face grew pale in the fire-She had hardly thought this light. day so near at hand. "You've got cold, father !" she said, briskly "Cheer up and let me nurse you a while.

"No such a thing !" cried the father, ngrily. "I tell you I'm grown old, an' I look to have my rest.

Many items of Marcella sat silent. trouble were cast up in her mind on else had lived in it, if Marcella had the moment into a long account-owing been allowed to go elsewhere to earn to the baker, dinner to morrow-rent her bread, or if the fever had not at the end of the week. Next week— spared her the last time it went its next month—next year !"

"Father," said she presently, "why own now, lower nor you nor me.' desire to marry her to some well-"" What do you mane?' said I, 'for to do man of his own, or not down now, lower nor you nor me.' well I minded her.'

"'The father went to ruin that year,' said Molly, 'wid his horses an' his hounds, an' his dinners. Hunted himself to death, an' his poor wife wid him. An' what was the daughter but nim. a child ? an' her friends has dropped off, an' the world has turned against her. An' she trying to airn her bread, the poor cratur, doin' little bits of sewin that wouldn't feed a cat. But it's in the graveyard she'll be afore long, said Molly "That's what Molly said, an' it was thrue. Molly was married only mid-dlin' herself. She had a corner to let, her. I seen her at the place, by the way I should give an order for work, an' the partty young face was thin an' worn, an' she had no more pride than a babby. For three long years 1 stood her friend, fast an' firm, till Molly died-rest her sowl !-an' there wosn' a crature left to take care of the little lady. I don't know where I got courage to ask her to marry me. I tould her I wasn't fit to spake to her, I knew; but I could give her a safe home, an' I could worship the ground she walked. An' she took it quite quiet, an' was thankful to me till the last day she lived. An' the ould house was beautiful to go into from ever the first day she set her foot upon the floor, an' ill luck n'er came near off the ditch.

she spend her whole life sewing alone me till she left it in her coffin. I made in a garret, as now, after her father her the purtiest gowns that ever seen the loom ; but she didn't like the gay had left her, when she should indeed be alone in the world? He must ones, I could see ; seemed as if they really be ill, must feel himself breakminded her o' somethin'! An' she ing down, or he never would have talked as he had talked this evening. never wanst gave me the crooked word. It was 'Yes, Michael, if ye Oh ! why had he not given her a trade, not taught her something by which she please.' She got rosy an' happy lookin for wan little while, after the could earn for him now, by which she child was born — that was you, Mar-cella. Then she faded like the snow after he was gone? should be able to maintain herself

kind

She thought of the very small amount of education she Old Michael paused and drew his hand across his eyes. Marcella had had received; not sufficient to listened to every word. The tale was able her to be a National sc be a National school not new to her, yet it never had grown teacher without further study. She wearisome. Many a time had her could read and write well, better than congregation. Doctors who have since examined her pronounce the conditions the same, declare that as far as medical much better than his own, class, she assured herself again and again investigation goes her spine is still absothat this was a matter in which she lutely inert, and that the fact that she had a right to refuse obedience to him. walks is entirely beyond their comprehension. Faith may account for it, Though she was certainly his child. and would always devote herself lov medicine cannot. ingly to his service, yet she had, as he

These are the facts in the case. Whether the girl has by some unac-countable force nerved herself to the had angrily complained, blood in her veins which was different from his. The instincts of her mother, of whose ordeal by sheer will power, whether she has been actually cured by divine ladyhood he so proudly boasted, were with her, and she felt that they would agency is a question that only time can cling to her as long as she lived. She acknowledged to herself now, what prove. The French priests meantime refuse absolutely to pronounce upon it. through loyalty to him she had often They are as astonished as the rest of tried to deny and ignore, that there was a gulf between herself and his the world at the change in the girl's condition, but with all humility, with friends and associates, which time discretion not with skepticism they say, would never help her to bridge. It was not that she disliked or despised 'Wait and see." Meantime it may be well to recall to the minds of the over-wrought parishioners, the words of St. Augustine on Miracles: "Who draws up the sap through the root of the vine to the respect them as occasion required, but bunch of grapes," he says, " and makes the wine, except God ; who, while man plants and waters, Himself giveth the increase? But when at the command of the Lord, the water was turned into to her grief and wept. Having faced the loneliness, the isolation of her position in the world, she perceived the wine with an extraordinary quietness, the divine power was made manifest by the confession even of the foolish? Who ordinarily clothes the trees with finement must be to her, the burden of leaves and flowers except God ? Yet when the rod of Aaron the priest blossomed, the God head conversed in some way with doubting humanity. There are miracles around us every day. We need not open our eyes to see them. — Catholic Citizen.

Sure to Win Sure to Wio. The people recognize and appreciate real merit. That is why Hood's Sarsaparilla has the largest sales in the world. Merit in medicine means the power to cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures—absolutely, permanently cures. It is the One True Blood Puritier. Its superior merit is an established fact, and merit wins.

HOODS PILLS are easy to take, easy to operate. Cure indigestion, headache. Derate. Cure intrigention, nearacter. Ill fitting boots and shoes cause corns. Holloway's Corn Cure is the article to use. Get a bottle at once and cure your corns.