TREATS ROSSLAND ORES.

Hendryx Electro-Cyanide Process Applied to Kootenay Mine Product.

The Spokesman-Review says:

The problem of handling the low grade refractory iron ore from the Kootenay mine at Rossland, B. C., has apparently been solved in tests of it made here with the Hendryx process of evaniding.

C. M. Fassett, who has been conducting the experiments, said last night:
"We have completed four runs of ore which comprised the most refractory product that Mine Manager William Thompson could secure. As Mr. Thompson expressed it, 'If the Hendryx system could handle that stuff successfully, it could deal with any ore in the mine.' I do not feel at liberty to give figures, but I can only say that the results showed a handso ne saving. The cost of reducing it should not be greater than for handling Republic ore. The Kootenay ore crushes easily, and the high percentage of iron -composing nearly half of the rock ices not seem to consume the cyanide unduly or to interfere with the precipitation of the metals." As Mr. Fassett has expressed the be ief that Republic ores can be treated for $1.50 per ton, it would appear tha the cost of reducing Kootenay ores by the same process would be well with that margin. The saving in freight and smelter charges under the present system of reducing the ores promise be the factor that will put the Kootenay on a paying basis. It has an enormous tonnage of low grade iron ore running from $5 to $10, that can hardly be handled under present conditions.
