HER HUSBAND WAS A DRUNKARD

A Lady who cures her husband of His Drinking Habits Writes of Her Struggle to Save her Home.

A PATHETIC LETTER.

"I had for a long time been thinking of trying the Tasteless Samaria Prescrip-tion treatment on my husband for his drinking habits but I was afraid he of trying the Tasteless Samaria Prescription treatment on my husband for his drinking habits, but I was afraid he would discover that I was giving him medicine, and the thought unnerved meday when he came home very much intoxicated and his week's salary nearly toxicated and his week's salary nearly toxicated and his week's salary nearly home from the ruin I saw coming, at all hear and determined to make an effort to save our home from the ruin I saw coming, at all hazards. I sent for your Tasteless Samaria Prescription, and put it in his coffee as directed next morning, and watched and prayed for the result. At noon I gave him more, and also at supper. He never suspected a thing, and I then boildly kept right on giving it regularly, as I had discovered something that set every nerve in my body tingling with hope and happiness, and I could see a bright future spread out before me—a bright future spread out before me—a breacful, happy home, a share in the good things of life, an attentive, loving husband, comforts and everything else dear to a woman's heart; for my husband had told me that whisky was vile stuff and he was taking a dislike to it. It was only too true, for before I had.

"Thank you, mother mine; that is a Thank you, mother mine; that is a delightful welcome to appreciative ears; while I am sure—'with an admiring glance from her to Laura—'one could not well be greeted with a more alluring eight than greets the eye here. You ladles look like two nymphs in some cool grotto; it is absolutely refreshing just to look at you, after coming in from the hot atmosphere that prevails outside.' returned his ing to flatter!" returned his mother, with assumed gravity, though a little smile of pleasure lurked about the corners of her mouth. "Let me tell you, it is a very bad habit for a young man to acquire. But, to be sensible, what have been doing down town today?"
Well, for one thing, I had an adventhe young man replied, smiling, as he threw himself into a great wickerchair and began to fan himself with a palm leaf which lay near his hand.
"An adventure!" exclaimed both ladies in a breath, while Laura lost a trifle of her exquisite color.
She had learned to love Max Remington with all the ardor of her impas-sioned nature during the three weeks which she had spent in his society, and which she had spent in his society, and she had set herself resolutely to work to win his affections in return, and now that one word "adventure" somehow sent a chill of apprehension to her

'Yes," Max replied, with an amused laugh, as he recalled the incident, "I met the queerest old codger in the world this morning; for originality and eccen-tricity, he goes far ahead of anything human that it has ever been my lot to "Do tell us about it. Ma-Mr. Remington," Laura cried, heaving a sigh of re-lief that there had been no woman in the case, and stumbling over his name with a conscious blush.

Two or three times of late she had almost called him "Max," and he had told himself that the slip was but natural, since his mother always addressed him thus, and doubtless spoke of him in the same way during his absence; and no thought, too, that her pretty blush and deprecating look were not only apologetic, but vastly becoming.

CHAPTER V.

"Tell you about my adventure? Certainly," Max replied; "but in order to thoroughly appreciate the situation, you should have been with me. I had occasion to take one of the "buses while down town today, and, as it happened, there was only one other passenger in it when I entered—a little old man, who looked as if he had come out of the ark. His clothes were as old-fashioned as His clothes were as old-fashioned as himself, though they were of good ma-terial. His coat—imagine it!—was one of those swallow-tailed affairs such as used those swantow-tailed allairs such as used to be worn fifty years ago; his nether garments were cut after the same ancient pattern, and were not remarkable as to fit; he wore a tail, white collar, with a black satin stock, and a plug hat that might have been his grandfather's Altogether he looked like hat that might have been his grand-father's. Altogether, he looked like some figure gotten up for an antedi-luvian concert or tableau, though instead of the proverbial blue-cotton umbrella, which one would naturally expect to see with such a costume, he carried a very nice black silk one with a gold handle, which could not have cost less than ten the proverbial blue-cotton He was about five feet five in judge, for his hair is as white as snow. | tivated.

His eyes are gray blue, but wonderfully keen and shrewd, with a quirk of quizzical mischief in them, and he was abrupt to curtness in his speech and man-

"Well, Max," said Mrs. Remington, with a ripple of musical laughter, "your power of description is certainly very vivid, and I am sure I should recognize this quaint old gentleman without any difficulty if I should ever meet him."

"I should really like you to see him." difficuty if I should ever meet him."

"I should really like you to see him," Max responded, "for I assure you he is a character such as one does not often meet, and he would both amuse and interest you. As for you, Miss Laura," turning with a laugh to her, "I imagine he might shock your fastidious taste somewhat."

he might shock your fastidious taste somewhat."

"I think, at least, I should not be shocked by the umbrella," she replied. demurely, but with a swift delightful blush, for he had never addressed her by her given name before, and her heart had thrilled with sudden joy at the sound of it from his lips.

"Yes, that was above criticism," he returned, "and, now I think of it, I believe you have a weakness for silk umbrellas with gold handles.

"I plead guilty to the charge," Laura "I plead guilty to the charge," Laura responded, smiling, "but please go on with the account of your adventure. I am intensely interested."

Max then threw back his handsome head and gave vent to a ringing laugh as he recalled it.

"Well," he went on, after a moment, "the old gentleman was sitting up at the head of the 'bus. I took my seat midway on the same side. Presently I took out a dime and was about to get up to out a dime and was about to get up to go and pass it to the driver, when my companion stretched forth his hand, saying, bluntly:

band had told me that whisky was vile stuff and he was taking a dislike to it. It was only too true, for before I had given him the full course he had stopped drinking altogether, but I kept giving him the medicine till it was gone, and then sent for another lot, to have on hand if he should relapse, as he has done from promises before. He never has, and I am writing you this letter to tell you how thankful I am. I honestly believe it will cure the worst cases."

Old gentleman must have given him the gold piece believing it to be a penny.

"I turned to him.

"Did you make a mistake and give the driver more money than you intended when you paid your fare?" I asked.

"I ain't in the habit of making mistakes in money matters,' he laconically returned. 'What's the matter, young man, didn't you get pennies enough in change?"

"I colored at the implied imputation of making a fuss over a penny but I

"I was very indignant at his assuming that I would keep the money under any circumstances, and I must have betrayed it. I know I was very red in the face, for he broke out: or ne broke out:
""Tut, tut, youngster; don't go to firing up like that; there are plenty of people is the world who would pocket that gold-piece and say nothing about it.' "I am not one of them, however,' I returned, with offended dignity,

"He chuckled to himself as if, somehow, the speech had amused him immensely.

"'Well, what are you going to do about it?' he asked. "'I am going to give it to you, sir,' I 'I feel sure that it must be you—you probably gave it to the driver in mistake—that is, if you had such a piece about you.'

'At this the strange creature began to shake with internal laughter, and to distort his funny face in a way that made me think that he must be half cracked. "After a minute he slipped his hand into one of his vest pockets and drew out several gold coins of different values." "Voyles right and various programs." "'You're right and you're wrong, my honest young man,' he said; 'the coin does belong to me, but I didn't give it to the driver in mistake. I took one of your pennies when he gave me the change and put the gold piece in its place.'
"'Why did you do that?' I asked, too astonished for the moment by such a strange proceeding to be angry, "and what do you suppose his answer was?" "It is the queerest adventure I ever heard of," Laura replied, while Mrs. Remington appeared intensely interested. "What did he say?" she asked. [To be Continued.]

HOCKEY. STRATFORD WON.

Stratford, Ont., March 19.-Brantford and Stratford competed here last night in a championship game of hockey for the Fawkes cup. The home team won by a score of 11 goals to 2. THE CROKINOLE LEAGUE.

Toronto Telegram: A suggestion was thrown out the other day that Stratford should join the newly-formed crokinole league and enter their hockey team. To this, however, they make an awful holler, drag the O. H. A. into it, and say that they would sooner be in with a crokinole league than a crooked-ol' league. Oh, this is shocking, as well as being uncalled for.

BASEBALL.

THE WHOLESALE LEAGUE. At a meeting held last evening, the Wholesale-Manufacturers' League of London was organized, five clubs paying the guarantee to finish the season. The concerns represented by clubs are as follows: The McClary Manufacturing Company, Southam Litho. Company, D. S. Perrin & Co., London Printing and Litho. Company, and Carling Brewing and Malting Company. Each will have a strong team in the field, and an extra good quality of the great game is confidently looked for. The league will be strictly amateur. Rules to govern this phase of the game will be strongly enforced. The officers chosen are the following:

Henry bluffed his friends and hosts in quite an extraordinary way."

BURDOCK BLOOD BBB BITTERS. FORTHE THE GREATEST OF SPRING MEDICINES.

In the spring the system is so overloaded with impurities that the organs are unable to properly eliminate the waste matter.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS is of the the greatest value in cleansing internally, just as soap and water cleanses externally. It flushes the sewers of the body, awakens the torpid organs and renews activity, pure blood is pumped to all parts of the body, thereby cleansing,

It turns Bad Blood into Rich Red Blood.

Take Bridock Bond Bitters and feel bright, healthy and vigorous.
