AS A MAN SOWS

Copyright, 1907, by the North American Company.
BY HELEN WALLACE,
Author of "The Greatest of These," "Their Hearts' Desire," etc

"Garry me! You couldn't. It is only in stories that full-grown young women are picked up and carried like feather-weights," with a valiant effort to make light of the situation.

"I carried you once, dear, and for a good way, too," said Conyers, and suddenly the choking hand about his heart gave way. It is not easy to maintain a hard and critical attitude toward the beautiful woman of your love when facing a common danger together, your arm upholding her and clasping her like warmth to your side. That impossible scene in the chapel filled Conyers with bitterness and regret. He had the courage, her effort not to be a burden on him, had all been telling on him, and now the barrier was burst and his heart flowed out to her again.

"Isobel," he said, as the wind slackened a little and breathing was less full, "I don't want to pry, but I would like to help you if I could. That fellow Ashe is a dangerous snake. I hope he's at the bottom of the ravine. Though I should dearly like to have had the pleasure of sending him there. For God's sake, don't have anything to do with him that you can help. He spoke about some answer he must have. Has he any right, any—any—hold—"

Isobel dragged her dazed forces together. With Basil cold and silent she might keep silence, too; but here in the warm shelter of his strong arm—

"He thinks he has," was all that she could say.

"And you think he will—will go to your father?"

"I have no doubt he will."

"And—what will happen?"

"Garrying with anxiety and the choking gusts."

"I don't know," he hesitated.

Conyers paused, in spite of the need for haste. "For God's sake, Isobel, trust me. Is it something that happened while you were away? It can't be anything else," he pleaded. "Somebody that you can't remember, but which that devil has got hold of, and is distorting for his own ends. He's playing on your fears, dear, making a

Even Her Blood Turned to Water.

When Dying of Pernicious Anaemia Her Life Was Saved By
FERROZONE

Probably very few cases are on record in which an absolute cure has been made of pernicious anaemia.

But Ferrozone did cure Miss Elaine Stanhope—cured her absolutely. And her mother, Mrs. G. Stanhope, of Rotherham, Ont., says the following:

"My daughter complained of feeling tired. She was very pale and listless, and kept losing strength till too weak to attend school. The doctors prescribed different bottles of medicine, but Elaine kept getting worse instead of better. She had Anaemia, and we were afraid for a while that she might never rally. We read of a similar case, that of Miss Descent, of Stirling, Ont., being cured by Ferrozone. And this induced us to get it for Elaine. It took three boxes of Ferrozone to make any decided improvement, but when six boxes were used my daughter was beginning to be her old self again. It didn't take much longer to make a complete cure, and I am convinced there is no better bloodmaker than Ferrozone. It has made a new girl of Elaine. She has gained ten pounds in weight, and looks the picture of perfect health. She is stronger and enjoys the best of spirits. The credit of her recovery is entirely due to Ferrozone."

Every grown girl and young woman can make herself strong and healthy with Ferrozone.

It makes blood, nerve and tissue—makes it fast—makes it stay.

Complexion soon becomes perfect, nerves get new strength, tiredness vanishes—perfect health is the reward for using Ferrozone, which is sold by all druggists—price, 50c per box; don't fail to try it.

mountain to your tender heart, to your pure soul, out of some molehill. If you can't tell me, then, whatever it is—tell your mother."

"My mother—oh, my God, no!" cried Isobel, sharply falling back against the supporting arm.

Conyers stood still, wrestling with a wilder storm than the snow-laden gale, but his first concern was to place the half-fainting girl in safety. Thinking must wait till then. He braced his arm more tightly about her, and began the heavy, plodding tramp once more. God only knew how far they might be from the village, but the world was reduced to a yard's breadth of dizzying, dancing snowflakes. Isobel still mechanically kept her feet, but her own strength he knew was failing from the double strain—and if so—

A sudden confusion of voices and of barking seemed all at once to rise about them, and one or two dogs came bursting through the pallid, glistening veil of snow, followed by a posse of guides!

An hour or two later, Isobel, who had been left alone with many tender injunctions to rest and sleep, grew almost desperate with lying wide-eyed, living over the day's happenings again, stole down to her mother's room. The table was strewn with letters and papers. Sir David, standing by it, seemed to be intently reading an official-looking paper.

Suddenly he crushed it together, and making one step to his wife's side, caught her in his arms.

"My wife, my dear wife—my own—my very own—my wife!" he gasped, as if overcome by some sudden, uncontrollable emotion.

Isobel was about to withdraw softly. For once her mother was wholly unconscious of her presence, and this aspect of her mother was wholly new to her. It was not the face which had now grown familiar to her, but the face of Marian Drummond, the woman whose patient, steadfast heart had been stronger than her pride, who had waited long for the love which came back to her at last.

"Marian, I have been a very sorry husband to you. I have tried you sorely since—since—"

"David, my husband, my love," in a voice of infinite soothing tenderness and gentle patience, "I know you have been sorely troubled—sorely distressed—but trust me, dear; has my love—my trust—ever failed you?"

There was a sudden smart tap at the door, and in very German English a waiter's voice said—

"Mistress Ashe requests most special to see Sir David Stormont."

As Sir David turned impatiently, his eyes met his daughter's, standing in the shadow of the door. Whatever the cause of their sudden new light, died out of his own like a lamp blown out by the wind.

"Tell him I will come," he said, in a dull, changed voice, thrusting the crumpled paper away.

CHAPTER XXVII.
A House of Cards.

"None the worse of your unpleasant experience, I hope?" inquired Sir David, rather perfunctorily, when Ashe was ushered into the room which he used for writing. There certainly did not seem much need for the inquiry, as Ashe, perfectly dressed, as usual showed no trace of the exhausting struggle through the snow.

"Fortunately, none of us needed to be rescued," said Ashe, with a smile; "although I am sure Conyers would be glad of their help in getting Miss Stormont safely home. It was terrible for her. I hope she hasn't suffered from the cold and the fatigue," earnestly.

"Thanks, I think not, though naturally she is a good deal exhausted," said Sir David, and then he paused definitely, a pause which said plainly enough, "What can you have to say to me which renders this interview necessary?"

And had Ashe not been so assured of the strength of his position, he might have found that a very embarrassing moment, and the embarrassment would not have been lessened by the fact that it took Sir David some time to comprehend what Ashe's business with him was, to realize that this young man, whom he knew merely as an agreeable "detritment," was with all due form requesting his daughter's hand.

"You think this great presumption, I fear," said Ashe, when he had finished, and Sir David sat gazing at him for a moment in silence, as if still wondering whether he had heard aright.

"I don't wish to use any harsh words, Mr. Ashe," he said at last; "but from anything I know of your position, it hardly entitles you, pardon me, to make such a request. You cannot but be aware that Miss Stormont will be my sole heiress."

It was Sir David Stormont, the grand seigneur, the great land owner, composedly conscious of his position and its dignities, who was speaking now.

"I don't know what encouragement you may think you have received to make this proposal," went on Sir David, in the tone of a man willing, in words at least, to spare another's feelings, but thinking it needful at the same time to show him the enormity of his proceedings; "I take it for granted, however, that you have come to me first."

"It would have been more correct, I admit," said Ashe calmly, "but the fact is I have spoken to Miss Stormont, and (smiling) she referred me to you."

"I hardly know how much you mean to imply by that, but, from what I know of my daughter's feelings, not its usual acceptance in such circumstances, I should think."

"The circumstances are hardly quite usual," put in Ashe. But Sir David went on:

"In any case, I must ask you now to take it from me as final that I have other views for Miss Stormont's future," rising as he spoke.

"For Miss Stormont! Yes, that I can quite understand, but you might have other views, perhaps, for Miss Isobel—Brown!" in a tone of studied quiet.

Sir David started to his feet as a man does who, unwarned, receives a vital stab.

"I know of no such person," he said peremptorily, haughtily, but with a swift intake of the breath.

Ashe smiled. "I am not quite the barefaced fortune-hunter you think me. I wouldn't have been guilty of such a fatuous proceeding unless, as you see, I had something to offer. 'Knowledge is power' sometimes, though not so often, perhaps, as the copybooks would have us believe. It will save time, however, if you will allow me to state what I happen to know, and then you can decide what it is worth, or, with a smile, 'kick me out, if you please. I shall be as brief as I can.'"

"It will be better," said Sir David, sternly, as he resumed his seat. "I can understand the truth, that you should wish to justify your conduct if you can."

"I think you will agree with me that I have done so when I have finished," said Ashe, and then in very succinct fashion he stated again all that he had learned, dwelling on the incontrovertible piece of evidence, the Testament. "Of course," he added, "a trifle like that, with no value save as a sentimental one—a memento of Miss Stormont's wanderings—might unintentionally be mislaid or destroyed, but even if that were the case, it is well remembered at Heberton, and a good many at Stormont have seen it," significantly.

"It is still at Stormont; I am not likely to part with it; but now I have, as you asked me, listened to what you have to say, and I can only make the same answer, that I have other views for my daughter. If I were a younger man, I might have resorted to your alternative," said Sir David, leaning back in his chair, and gazing steadily at Ashe.

DANGER OF LIVING WITH CONSUMPTIVES

Is real danger because the sputum of affected persons diffuses itself through the air and finds lodgment in the systems of others. If exposed to consumption, the fragrant healing Catarrhose, the most efficient germicide known. No case of catarrh can withstand Catarrhose which cures this loathsome disease thoroughly. Cold in the head is cured in a few minutes, and bronchitis, asthma and lung trouble are cured to stay, cured if Catarrhose is employed. "I don't know any remedy so good for catarrh and bronchitis as Catarrhose," writes N. T. Eaton, of Knowlton. "It cured me after years of suffering, and saved me from consumption. Two months' treatment $1; trial size, 25c."

"A very creditable piece of bluff," was Ashe's inward comment. Then, aloud—"I have never doubted, nor do I think any one would doubt, that the young lady is your daughter, or that she is a Stormont by blood; the likeness is too remarkable. The point is, however—Is she your heiress—is she a Stormont by name as well as by descent? That is a point which might greatly interest Captain Stormont Drummond, who, failing your lawful issue, is, I understand, your next heir."

4304—A NEGLIGEE SHIRT FOR THE BOY.

A well-fitting shirt, which does not "ride up" in the back nor constrict the arms or neck is a real comfort to the wearer, whether boy or man. This rare combination of virtues, however, is not often encountered in the shop-made shirt, and for this reason, if for no other, most housemothers prefer to make such garments with their own hands. An excellent model for a boy's negligee shirt is here shown, and will be appreciated by the home-sewer, who recognizes the value of a reliable pattern. It provides for either box pleats, or lap closing, in regulation coat style, and may be made with or without the turndown collar and permanent or detachable cuff. The style is suitable for development in fine flannel, cotton, cheviot, madras, percale or any shirt material. 2% yards 27 inches wide, being needed for the 10-year size.

4304—Seven sizes, 4 to 16 years.

Owing to the fine construction of most ranges it is a rather difficult feat to cook and bake successfully at the same time.

But the arrangement of the Pandora flues differs considerably from others. They are so constructed that the draft for baking is also the best for cooking, the heat circulating around the oven twice and under every pot hole before passing up the chimney.

The Pandora bakes and cooks perfectly at the same time.
