DODGING THE ISSUE.

Mr. Rowell sharply reproves Sir James Whitney's worse than evasions of the bilingual school question. Sir James in his latest speeches flatly asserts that no bilingual schools exist in Ontario. He has the audacity of the farmer at the circus, who, after steadily gazing at the giraffe for five minutes, shook his head and exclaimed, "There ain't no such animal!" Sir James is quibbling, but his quibble is an accusation of the education department. Schools attended wholly by French children are bilingual in name, and under the law. If they are not bilingual in reality—if they are one-language instead of two-language schools, and fail to give the pupils a working knowledge of English—whose fault is it? Is it the fault of the education department, and of the Ontario Government, which is the overlord of the department. The responsibility reaches directly to Sir James Whitney himself. Whatever else he is, he "the master of the administration." Mr. Rowell challenges him in these words:

"The failure of the Government to frankly state its position on the question of bilingual schools, and its evident desire to run with the fox and to hunt with the hounds, is largely responsible for the wide-spread agitation which is disturbing the public mind today in this Province. Sir James evidently hoped to avoid a declaration of policy by bringing on the elections before the receipt of Dr. Mercur's report, but, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. Sir James seems to have issued his declaration that there are no bilingual schools in Ontario, and yet Conservative candidates in certain sections of the Province are pledging themselves to abolish bilingual schools. Sir James evidently realizes that the public is not satisfied with his method of evasion. He is not alone, and now Hon. Mr. Foy, the Attorney-General, is coming to the rescue in a carefully-prepared opinion. Mr. Foy states that the law does not authorize bilingual schools, and that if there are any such they must cease to exist. The Attorney-General, Sir James claims to have opinions of his own. If so, will he tell us what he thinks of the manner in which the law has been administered during the past seven years? Is he satisfied with the present conditions? If so, let him have the courage to defend them, and tell his supporters that all further agitation is useless. If he is dissatisfied with the present conditions, let him have the courage to say so, and let him tell us why he has not taken steps to remedy them, and what steps he now proposes to take to remedy these conditions. If he is ignorant of the present conditions, then there must be incompetency in the management of our educational affairs, such as we had not even suspected."

There's the rub: Is Sir James satisfied with present conditions, or if he is dissatisfied, why has he allowed them to develop, and what remedy does he propose? He has prematurely dissolved the Legislature so as to forestall Dr. Mercur's report, which would come and give the electors the groundwork for the adequate discussion of the question during the election campaign.

THE WOMEN SUFFRAGISTS AGAIN.

The forcible-futile demonstration of the British women suffragists was inspired by a reverse in the midst of triumphant anticipation. The Government had promised facilities for the conciliation bill, enfranchising a million women, which was certain of passing the House of Commons. The measure was all the militant suffragists wanted at present. They had been for months celebrating what they supposed was a famous victory.

Then came the Government's announcement of a manhood suffrage bill, which abolishes all the technicalities and restrictions upon which the conciliation bill was built. The number of electors in England and Wales on the register at present is 6,387,716, but there are 5,552,426 males over 21 years of age who would be entitled to vote on a manhood suffrage basis. Including Scotland and Wales, there would be an addition of 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 males if manhood suffrage prevailed. To place the sexes on an equal footing under the new act would be to confer the ballot on all women over 21 years of age. In the United Kingdom they outnumber the males by considerably more than a million. The Government has offered to allow the House of Commons to extend the vote to women on these terms, but while the House would have voted to enfranchise a million women, under the Conciliation Bill, it is very doubtful whether it would venture to make women the majority of the whole electorate.

Here is where the grievance of the women suffragists comes in. They assert that the manhood suffrage bill is an expedient of Premier Asquith to wreck their cause, to which he is opposed. The Government has a strong defence in the anomalous condition of the present franchise. It is a jungle of technicalities. Men vote as property-owners, tenants, lodgers, occupiers, and in other categories which would scarcely be understood in Canada. Manhood suffrage would simplify the franchise, and be a measure of justice to the poorer classes. The women suffragists do not oppose it, but they ask the Government to include the women, and stand or fall by them. As the ministers are divided on the question of woman suffrage they refuse to do this. They throw the whole responsibility on the House of Commons, leaving their supporters free to vote as they please.

THE BANKS OF LOCH LOMOND.

In the west of Scotland at the present time a series of demonstrations is being held to voice the protests of hundreds of thousands of humble toilers against the complete commercialization of the "bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond." The rights of the people to gather on the shores that are shrouded in song have been gradually curtailed by private interests until, as the final injury, the proposal has come to shut out the pilgrim from the one route left by which he might approach and look upon the lake even though but for a glimpse.

Along the ways of freest access leading to the lake, the land-owner has raised barriers to keep the people of Glasgow and all the outside world from their poetic heritage. For just as Scotland inherited the immortal memories of the loch, so she will reclaim her rights to roam the heather-clad fells, the open moorland, the narrow passes, and the great green straths.

The landlord has claimed the protection of private privilege; walls have been built, keepers and dogs set on the watch. One of the public roads that formerly skirted the lake's shores has been moved behind an estate, and every yard of shore land has been claimed as private property. Only at Loch Lomond has one been able to secure a boat and row up the river into the loch. One must not risk the chance of landing, or the keepers would be about his ears, and to moor a boat in the centre of the lake one must contribute five shillings. Now the land from which the public has embarked for years has been claimed by private owners, and they are making efforts to move some of the boat owners to serve the public. Should they be successful in the courts, there will be no free way into Loch Lomond. As one writer has it, the beauty spot will become "a glorified cinematograph show." But the whole of Scotland is rebelling, and the probability is that patriotism will triumph over privilege.

The Ottawa Opposition is still keeping the Government in hot water on the naval question.

Sir James Whitney's assertion that there are no bilingual schools will be news to Bishop Fallon.

The power behind the throne, Mr. Bourassa, must be pretty well satisfied with the Government so far.

The militant suffragettes are accused of throwing stones. The fact that windows were hit is prima facie evidence in their favor.

Adam Beck's and Clifford Sifton's horses continue to take prizes at New York. Before the election these gentlemen had a poor opinion of Canadian horses.

Sugar is dear in Great Britain, and Russia has a surplus, but Russia cannot export it because of an international agreement, to which Great Britain subscribed five years ago. The British people are clamoring for the cheap Russian sugar, and the British Government asks the powers to allow them to have it. It is a warning against interference with the natural course of trade which will not be lost on a nation that has to import most of its food.

THE WARFARE OF MONEY-GETTING.
(Montreal Herald.)
In the warfare of money-getting we allow both ourselves and our friends everybody who is making money is a friend of everybody else who is doing the same, in the present state of our society, to do things at the expense of the poor and ignorant of today and the helplessness of posterity, things for which there is no excuse in any code of ethics save the jungle's. We have taken a virulent country of gigantic richness, and which rival those of the most ancient and burdened cities of Europe. We have found a land where food was had for the picking of the soil; and—largely by our unassuming grabbing for privileges and "inside interests" and our capitalizing of those privileges into a perpetual charge against posterity—we have made it cost more to live here than it does to live in the least-favored countries of the old world. We have invited the peoples of Europe, by a trumpet-call of summons, to come and help us develop our heritage; and when they arrive we host to many thousands of them, as well as to many thousands of them, which will barely keep them living without crime or immorality.

HAD SOME EFFECT.
Mr. Rowell's speech, says the Toronto News, will not set the country on fire. Maybe not, but it has at least made Sir James fume up.

WHY?
[Toronto Star.]
Mr. Bonar Law, it seems, never lived in Hamilton, Ont., as was reported. Then why did he leave Canada?

NEARLY 1,000,000 OLD AGE PENSIONERS.
[London Daily News.]
Particulars are given in the 40th annual report of the British Local Government Board, just issued, of the old age pensioners. The number payable on March 31 last was:

England.....575,769
Wales.....38,084
The total for the United Kingdom was 607,461.

The effect of the removal of the pauper disqualification on old age pensions is shown by the decline in the total number of aged paupers, as follows:

Jan. 1, 1910.....195,844
July 1, 1910.....186,984
Jan. 1, 1911.....146,429

ONE MORE UNFORTUNATE.
(Puck.)
Take her up tenderly,
With soft and loving hands,
Skirted fashionably slenderly,
Too strong to tear.

So, when she tripped a bit
Where it was rough,
Though the thing ripped a bit
'Twasn't enough.

Down she went, tottering
Into the dirt,
Fervently muttering:
"Blame such a skirt!"

Loop up her tresses,
And great and goodly thatch!
Her many-bowed tresses,
While wondering guesses
Why don't they match?

Fashioned so slenderly,
Come, gentlemen,
Take her up tenderly,
Start her again!

BORDEN'S QUEER ZOO.
(Montreal Herald.)
Sir Wilfrid really oughtn't to poke so much fun at a hopelessly ignorant and stupid man like the Hon. Mr. Borden. His children are sturdy and pretty. His wife, you can bet, is no slouch. You don't think he'd mix acid with honey, do you? That all he brings home is his grouchy countenance.

Down-town he's good to the stranger, Unselfish and gentle and fine; At home he's a dog-in-the-manger. At home he's a dog-in-the-manger.

An ugly old brute, or a shrew, At home he's a dog-in-the-manger. At home he's a dog-in-the-manger.

At work he'd mix acid with honey, At work he'd mix acid with honey. At work he'd mix acid with honey.

For that he would be losing his money; For that he would be losing his money. For that he would be losing his money.

It's only at home he's a grouchy, It's only at home he's a grouchy. It's only at home he's a grouchy.

THE CROSS ROADS.
(St. Kiefer.)
How many people have halted here
Where the roads that cross lead out?
How many with hope and how many
How many with foolish doubt?

How many have halted to rest awhile
Beneath your sheltering tree,
Remembering many a weary mile
Or dreaming contentedly?

The signs are dim on the poet which leaves
Pastured fields or to dismal scenes,
To happiness or dismay.

What songs of hope and what sad refrains
The murmuring stream has sung—
Songs for the greedy of worldly gains,
Or love for the gladdened young?

Many a brow has been dampened here
And many a hope reached high,
And many a purpose strong and clear
Has here been left to die.

And how many tell you and who may
Which one of these parting ways
Shall lead to happiness and success,
To victory and to peace?

The signs are dim and the post is frail,
And the roads which cross are long,
And here is doubt for the weak and frail
And hope for the sure and strong.

How many chose wisely? Who shall tell?
And how many have chosen ill?
And how many have finished the journey well,
And how many are struggling still?

A LYCHING IN SIGHT.
Mobile, Ala., Nov. 22.—Information from Louisville, Mississippi, this forenoon, says a mob has formed there, and is threatening to attack the jail to lynch Ben Walker, a private detective, under arrest for perjury. Walker is involved in the Janie Sharp murder case. It is believed he had much to do with the arrest of two men, later freed, in connection with the killing of Miss Sharp. One man now stands convicted for the murder, but he has been granted a new trial.

GODERICH MAY TAKE LOCAL OPTION VOTE

Big Petition is Being Prepared by the Temperance People.

[Special to The Advertiser.]
Goderich, Nov. 22.—The W. C. T. U. are organizing to bring on another vote on local option in this town in January next, and have had a large petition signed to present to the council. Local option was only defeated by six votes last time it was voted on. It is said it will be defeated by a much larger vote now.

The two large steel snows that are under construction for Contractor Connolly are about completed. One was launched a few weeks ago, and the other is ready to be launched. They are 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, with a draft of water of 10 feet, and cost $25,000 each. It has taken a large gang of men all summer to build them. Mr. Connolly intends using them on a large contract he has in Quebec.

A New Pastor.
Rev. J. B. Forthrighting, of Toronto, will be the new incumbent in St. George's English Church. He will take charge next Sunday, and succeeds Rev. Mark Turnbull, who was called to America. Rev. Mr. Hill, of Regina, has been officiating for the last few Sundays. He returns to Regina on Monday next.

The new dredge that has been under construction all summer for the Marlton Dredging Company and was launched about a week ago, is now ready for work. This is a very powerful dredge, and is much larger than the one they now operate, being 75 feet long, and having 100-horsepower. The dipper is also much larger, and takes one and a half times as much as the other dredge. It is also constructed of dip rock, and will cost about $50,000.
