After Grippe

or any Sickness

Vinol Creates Strength

"After a long attack of Grippe, Mrs. Vaught seemed unable to recover her strength. She was very weak and had no appetite. VINOL rapidly improved her condition and restored her to health. I sincerely recommend its use during convalescence or any run down condition."

JUDGE C. N. VAUGHT, Huntsville, Ala.

Miss Adelaide Gamm, of Watford, Wis., writes, "After a severe attack of the Grippe, my system was in a very weakened, nervous, run-down condition. I took VINOL with the best of results, and it made me feel better and stronger than I have been for years."

We have never sold in our store a more valuable health restorer for weak and run down persons than VINOL, and we ask such people in this vicinity to try VINOL with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not do all we claim for it.

SAVAGES AND WHALERS

THEY WERE THE SUBJECTS OF

W. L. ALLARDYCE IN FIJI.

Pro-Consul Who Is Now British Governor of the Falkland Islands,

Stop: Man-Eating to Avoid Appearing on the Menu as a Piece of Resistance—Left Tropics to Serve Flag on Edge of Antarctic.

Twenty-five years in the south sea islands and six years on the border of the Antarctic are enough to fill a person with a desire to see something of the rest of the world, and that is possibly one reason why W. L. Allardyce, his Majesty's governor of the Falkland Islands, is making a tour of the world.

From 1789, when he first went out to the south seas as a junior clerk, until 1904 Governor Allardyce spent most of his time in the various islands in the Pacific, notably in Sarra, Tonga and the Fijis.

"I first went to the Fijis when King Thakombar was alive," said Governor Allardyce recently. "He was the original 'king of the cannibal isles' who has been sung about. Thakombar was a tall man with a big white beard, and his hands were so big that if you put one of yours in his it would disappear. He always wore the native garb, somewhat modified, for he insisted upon the white shirt of civilization and a necktie, which first he wore tucked into a kilt of native cloth. His legs were bare. He also wore a headress of some kind of white or smoked native cloth.

"Thakombar always insisted upon the observance of the outward forms of respect. As a rule, the native Fijian doffs his headress when he comes into the presence of a higher chief, but this was not enough for Thakombar. The man who met the king on the road had to sit down in the road and clap his hands or smite his thighs and shout 'Woh, woh!'"

"The missionaries thought the Fijians were civilized in that early day, and the natives had nominally accepted Christianity, but as late as 1894 they were not up to all the forms of Christianity and civilization, for they were still eating one another. In that year, however, it was stopped by force.

"There had been an outbreak in the interior. I was native minister at the time and with the governor, some 2,000 native allies and a few hundred of our own men went up and called upon the cannibals to give up those of their number who had not long before eaten two native missionaries.

"To our amazement the leaders replied that if we did not go away they would put the governor and myself in the oven also. We tried to call them to reason, but they would not entertain our truce envoys. Finally we had to attack them. We captured some 200 of them in the fight, and the licking they got taught them we meant what we said, and there has been no more man-eating since then.

"In the early eighties there were not more than 1,500 white men in all the islands. They were mostly Anglo-Saxons, some being Americans. The white population of the country is now over 4,000. In addition some 40,000 East Indians have been imported into the country from Bengal to work the sugar plantations. The sugar industry has grown so that the exportation is now approximately 80,000 tons.

"We try to preserve the communal system of Government among them, as far as possible. The people are ruled by their chiefs, the something like 90,000 Fijians having several dozen head chiefs, and these have many petty ones under them. The heads of provinces are paid salaries ranging from $2,000 a year downward. These chiefs have not the power of life and death.

"There is never any summer in the Falklands," continued Governor Allardyce; "but, on the other hand, the thermometer hardly ever goes down to zero. But what gets to you is the cold wind with a low temperature. Most of the people there are engaged either in sheep-raising or whaling. The whole country is a sheep farm, and the holdings range from 700,000 acres, running 200,000 sheep, to small runs that carry only 3,000 to 4,000. There are 300,000 sheep in the Falklands. In the Falklands group are some fifty or sixty islands, the largest being East Falkland, which is about 90 by 50 miles, and West Falkland, which is 20 by 30 miles.

"The whaling industry is very remunerative. The whalers are mostly Norwegians, and they fish around the Falklands and South Georgia, also going as far south as the South Shetlands and the South Orkneys.

"There are five different kinds of whales in those waters. Of them the right whale, or the nord kappa, as the Norwegians call it, is worth from $7,500 to $10,000, principally on account of the whalebone. Then there is the blue whale, which is the biggest of all, often running to 90 or 100 feet in length. The sperm whale, of course, everybody knows. Then there is the humpbacked whale, so called from an enormous hump, and the sei whale, which is not so important."

The Largest Domes.
Some of the largest domes in the world are: The Pantheon at Rome, 142 feet diameter, 143 high; baths of Caracalla, Rome, 112 feet diameter, 116 feet high; St. Sophia, Constantinople, 115 feet diameter, 201 feet high; St. Maria delle Fure, Florence, 139 diameter, 310 feet high; St. Peter's, Rome, 139 feet diameter, 330 feet high; St. Paul's London, 112 feet diameter, 215 feet high.

Classics and Clothes.
"I suppose you would like to have a customer with a figure like the Apollo Belvedere."

"No," answered the tailor. "Handsome men aren't always the best pay. I'd rather have one with a figure like Cassius."

OTHER "OSBORNES."

Giant Legal Cases That Have Set the Judges Thinking.

Every now and again the judges of Britain are called upon to decide matters fraught with tremendous importance to the nation at large. But when, in December of last year, the House of Lords gave its decision in the now historic "Osborne" case, probably few people, beyond those intimately concerned, realized its far-reaching effects.

The results is, of course, that members of trade unions cannot be compelled to pay for the support of Labor M.P.'s, which now brings about the wholly surprising proposal that Labor M.P.'s shall not be obliged to sign the Labor "ticket."

Recently, too, there was the "Crown and Shuttle Case." The result of this is to reduce the rateable value of licensed property throughout the land, and, consequently, local authorities have had to increase their demands for rates to make up the deficiency. The contention in this case was that the imposition of the heavy licensing duties under the last Fijian license Act reduces the rental value of licensed houses—a contention which the courts upheld.

Throughout ecclesiastical circles, the final decision, last December, in the great "Dannister case" caused consternation and surprise. It is the most momentous decision affecting the Church of England for many a long day. The case arose out of the refusal by a clergyman to permit a gentleman and his wife to receive Holy Communion, on the ground that the husband had married his deceased wife's sister.

Ingenious and interesting were the arguments, the main point being that, although marriage with a deceased's wife sister is undoubtedly legal now, the act legalizing them says expressly that no clergyman shall be punished for refusing to perform "the duties of his office." The answer to this is that "duties of his office" apply only to the actual marriage service; that, although a clergyman may properly refuse to marry a man to his deceased wife's sister, the clergyman's immunity from punishment extends solely to the marriage ceremony. Which was emphatically an interpretation which clergymen had never anticipated.

Another vastly important religious case was that of the Scotch "Free Church," decided in 1904. The case lasted seventeen days in the House of Lords alone. All the funds, property, and buildings of the Free Church of Scotland—several million pounds' worth—were affected.

The point here arose out of the establishment in 1843 of the Free Church, all the funds of which were placed upon certain trusts. In 1900 the majority of the Free Church members amalgamated with the Presbyterian Church, and included all those trust funds in the amalgamation. But the minority said: "No; you can't do away with our old trust deed in that cavalier fashion. You are not entitled to alter the Free Church doctrines."

All Scotland was agitated. It was the great topic among Highlanders and Lowlanders. And it was held—in what is considered to be one of the most important decisions ever given by the House of Lords—that the minority were right. A special Act of Parliament was needed the following year to adjust matters.

Every tobaccoist remembers the "Ogden" litigation, in 1906—an echo of the tobacco war. Something like a million sterling was affected. Ogden, the tobacco merchant, offered to divide each year, for four years, $1,000,000, and all the profits on their trade in the United Kingdom, on certain conditions, one being that the tradespeople were to agree to deal exclusively with Ogden.

For three months things went on merrily. Then Ogden went into voluntary liquidation, and considered that there was no obligation to pay the bonus. But the House of Lords decided that the agreement to distribute the huge bonus existed.—London Answers.

Waterproofing Woollen.
A simple way to make woollen garments waterproof is given in La Terre Vaudoise. It was told to the editor by an old forester:

Have two small tubs. In each put eight or nine quarts of rainwater. In one dissolve 150 grains of alum and in the other the same weight of acetate of lead. When dissolved pour one into the other. A white precipitate will fall. Then pour off the clear liquid into the other tub. In this dip the garments to be treated. Do not wring them out, but hang them up to drip. When they are dry a gray power will appear, which may be brushed off. The colors will not be affected, and the cloth will shed water for a year, when it may be treated again.

The Word "Gent."
At one time the word "gent" was a reputable term for general use. A respectable writer in 1864 tells of "a supper to divers gentlemen of the Gray's Inn for the great amitie between them and the Middle Temple gents." The diarist Evelyn speaks of the "noise and tumult occasioned by three or four wild gents in drink."

Soon after Queen Victoria's accession "gents" became vulgar. Thackeray speaks of it in 1842 as an "affectation diminutive at present much in use among commercial persons."

In the Paper.
"Did ye bring the paper home, Silas?" asked Mrs. Witherbee.

"Ya-as," said Silas.

"Anything particular in it this mornin'?" asked the lady.

"Ya-as," said the farmer. "Tew quarts of peanuts and a bottle o' horse liniment. Kinder thought you and I might have a little spree for supper."

Who Adam Was.

Windsor women still insist on buying their pony coats in Detroit, and as a result the customs officers insist on doing their duty. Thirty of these coats were held for duty on Saturday alone. Something like 100 women have been notified to call and pay the duty on coats purchased across the river. They are settling without much protest.

John Taylor, jeweler of Essex, met with an accident at Edgar Mills on Tuesday night by which his right leg was broken below the knee. Mr. Taylor, wife and child accompanied a sleighload to Ed. Oakley's to attend a party, and when crossing the icy road, carrying his babe, he slipped, and falling, his right leg doubled under him.

A little excitement occurred in the Maitland street school, Strathroy, Thursday morning last, when the plaster in the basement fell down, and the heat from an overheated furnace pipe ignited a piece of the woodwork. The scholars were quietly and promptly dismissed without any excitement or anyone being injured. The fire was soon extinguished, and the scholars dismissed for the day.

The prosperity of the country is attested by an increase of 48 per cent. in postal money orders to the British Isles and the Continent. During the holiday season the department reports remittances of $75,000 daily.

"I lost weight and had no appetite. I tried everything I ever heard of for piles, as I was willing to try anything to get relief. It was useless, however, and I almost gave up in despair.

One day a friend gave me a sample of Zam-Buk, and told me of a friend of his who had been cured. I decided to try Zam-Buk and the relief I got was encouraging. Mr. Peter McKenzie, of the 4th line, Moore, met with a painful accident on Tuesday. He had been out getting some water for his horses and on the road slipped and fell, knocking off one of his knee caps. He managed to drag himself home, which was some distance, and having a phone, called a neighbor, who went to his assistance and called up a doctor. Mr. McKenzie was alone at home, his wife being away. When his neighbor, Mr. Brown, arrived Mr. McKenzie was lying prostrate on the floor, and had almost perished with the cold in his attempt to get home. He is now doing as nicely as could be expected.
