

Your attention is again called to the following list of publications which can be obtained from the office of the Wawa :

English, Chinook and Latin Manual, 50 cents; Skwamish, Seshel and Slayamen Manual, 50 cents; Shushwap Manual, 30 cents; Okanagan Manual, 25 cents; Lillooet Manual, 25 cents; Thompson Manual, 25 cents; Stalo Manual, 25 cents; Polyglot Manual, eleven languages, cloth, $2.

Kamloops Wawa 1892, $1.50;
Kamloops Wawa 1893, $1.50;
Kamloops Wawa 1894, $1.50;
Kamloops Wawa 1895, $1.00;
Kamloops Wawa 1896, $1.00;
Wawa Shorthand Instructor, 15 cents; First Reader, 15 cents; Post Stamps accepted, U.S. or others.

Some more about high prices in the olden times. We read about ten years ago, in one of the papers of this Province how a man coming into this country in '58 in search of a brother whom the mine craze had led into the Cariboo district, arrived at Yale on a steamboat. He found no other means of proceeding on his journey than to take stick in hand and travel on the unique trail that led from Yale up country. After travelling a few hours in that way, he came to a log cabin of very primitive appearance, above the door of which he read: "Mails for Travellers" Peeping in at the door, he saw a man lying on a couch made of branches of fir covered with a blanket. The traveller ventured to ask: "Can I have something to eat?"—

"Can you cook?" was the answer. For fear of the worst, our traveller said: "I am not much used to it, but I will try." "Now, said the other, there is the bacon and there are beans, I will light the fire, and then you will cook for yourself." After doing the best he could, and taking the most simplified meal he ever had in his life, our traveller asked: "Is there any thing to pay?" "It is five Dollars," said the man in the house. "It is rather high, said our man, but I suppose you will make an allowance in favor of the cook." "I am not the landlord, said the other, the fixed price is five Dollars a meal, and those who come in too late have to cook for themselves."

Now five Dollars was the outside paid for a meal in early days, but it was customary to pay Two Dollars and a half for a common meal on beans and bacon. If eggs were ordered as extras, they were charged a dollar each. Bread was One Dollar and a half a pound, and flour one Dollar a pound or fifty Dollars a sack of fifty pounds. On the other side, a man's day's work was paid Fifteen to Twenty Five Dollars; so that living in this country was yet quite possible.

ST. DIONYSIUS THE AREOPAGITE,
First Bishop of Paris.

We read in the Roman Breviary, on the ninth of October, how St. Dionysius, otherwise St. Denys, a member of the Athenian Areopagus, who was converted to the Christian religion by the preaching of St. Paul, and who then became the head or first Bishop of the Church of