

October is to the College student in general, and to the amateur "literateurs" of the College Magazines in particular, a month of planning and "forward-looking thoughts." While these may be at times vague and visionary, and never fated to be realized, let us hope that in the year the efforts of the editorial boards in our sister Colleges may be crowned with success, and College journalism show itself worthy of a place among the factors that mould our national thought and literature.—Ex.
