

CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

The history of the United States is a story of the growth of a nation from a collection of colonies to a great republic. It is a story of the struggle for freedom and self-government, of the fight against tyranny and oppression, and of the triumph of the people over their rulers. It is a story of the development of a government that has become a model for the rest of the world.

The story begins with the Pilgrims who landed on the shores of Massachusetts in 1620. They were a group of men who had fled from the religious persecution of their native England. They sought a place where they could worship God in their own way. They found a place in a remote corner of a remote colony. They were a group of men who were determined to live by their own rules. They were a group of men who were determined to be free.

The story continues with the Revolution of 1776. It is a story of a people who were determined to break the chains of British rule. It is a story of a people who were determined to be free. It is a story of a people who were determined to live by their own rules. It is a story of a people who were determined to be free.

The story ends with the present day. It is a story of a nation that has become a great power. It is a story of a nation that has become a model for the rest of the world. It is a story of a nation that has become a beacon of hope for the people of the world.

I thank you for the final proof which you have sent me for the book.
