In "The Winning of Barbara Worth," the dramatization of Harold Bell Wright's famous novel, the scenic equipment is said to be one of the most realistic ever given a book play. Picturing as it does the desert of Palma de la Mane de Dios-"the hollow of God's Hand"-and other scenes in the glo-rious west, with all its vastness and beauty, the work of the scenic artist was a big task. The story of the play is visualized and made real by the beautiful settings. "I-I'm simply so nervous," she said, her color very high, "that I can't go back to the table." 1 . . . I halted in dismay. "Mary," I exclaimed, "do you mean to say that simply because we were fools enough to get up and join an ex-hibition dance, without realizing it you're going to curtail dinner. It seems rather difficult tonight for me even to gratify normal pangs of hunger." A Hasty Retreat.

"Well, for heaven's sake," I implor-ed, "don't gry here in the hotel corri-dor, We'll get upstairs if you must." Now the whole truth is that Mary was on such a nervous mettle after going thru a dance intended to be solely an exhibition dance by paid profes-sionals that she had lost her head and dreaded to go back to the table, the cynosure of all eyes, even if those eyes were frankly admiring and all hands had been applauding. Tm awfully sorry you feel so badly, but I don't see why. We did butt into an exhibition dance, but you danced better than the chiffon girl, and the dining room knew it. That was why they gave you such al up-roar of applause. And that's why the two professional dancers rather glared when you appeared. Likely they thought you were some rival, profes-sional who'd butted in merely to take away some of the dazzle of the dance." Mary sat up and wiped her eyes. "They certainly did applaud when we came off the floor," she admitted. "But I was so nervous Peter, and I
