Auctioneer Sold Off Contents of Cox Home on Sherbourne Street.

ANTIQUES DISPOSED OF

Rare and Valuable Articles Were Sold Without Reserve Yesterday.

Dismantling the handsome old resiace of the late Mrs. George A. Cox was a ceremony participated in by scores of Toronto's well-to-do residents, who took yesterday's opportunity of adding to the beauty of their individual homes by the purchase of a rare vase, a costly picture or a valuable piece of period furniture. From 11 o'clock, when the traditional auctioneer, in the guise of Chas. M. Henderson & Co., took possession, a constant stream of fashionably-dressed women and no small number of men, passed in and out of the gates of 467 Sherbourne, streat over which was passed in and out of the gates of 467 Sherbourne street, over which was flung the huge red banner of the auctioneer. The idle curious were few in number and were only seen to wander about the still pretty lawns, bright with autumn foliage, while from the open doors and high windows all sounds were "bargain" and "bid."

The Selling.

Shortly after the noon hour all the spacious ground floor furnishings had been sold, certain pieces bringing excellent prices, but the majority of sales being at great sacrifice. In the drawing-room an exquisite old colonial

The handsome floor covering, an axminister in charming colors, sold for $60, and the huge white bearskin which had once reposed before the cosy log fire, was passed into another life for the sum of $66. Many of the valuable antiques and various work of art of a personal nature had been disposed of prior to the public sale, but some rare old Sevres vases and Carrara marble statuary were among the ornaments which sold with little effort.

Some Sacrifices.

The Grandfather Clock.

As the visitors followed the auctioneer in tall silk hat and shouting "Going, going, gone," about nothing at all, just to worry people or to keep up imaginary sagging enthusiasm—to the upper floor, no eye failed to see the dear old grandfather clock, which still ticked in a dignified monotone, reluctant in surrendering old associations. The sum of $150 was paid for this handsome old mahogany piece. The bedroom suites were equal in choice and artistic color arrangements to the rest of the house, the handsome middle room, in mahogany and Helland blue, containing splendid pieces.
