

any matter decided under the Act, in the County Court for the district in which any person entitled to such compensation resides.

Held, on the facts, that the applicants had not proved that they were dependants of the deceased, but,

Seemle, the principle governing Lord Campbell's Act governs in the Workmen's Compensation Act, viz.: Given the wrongful act in respect of which the deceased, had he lived, would have had a right of action, the statute intends, in case of death, to make the wrongdoer liable in damages to those who stood to the deceased in any one of the relationships mentioned in the Act.

O'Shea, for applicants. Hallett, for respondents.
