The Minister of Militia and staff, with the local escort, had stopped at the entrance, and when the Marines and the Highlanders had presented arms and lined up on the bridge the distinguished civilmans marched past them, along the edge of the crowd, and into the Temple of Music. Both Flags Intertwined. The Temple was very prettily decorated. A mammoth American flag hung in the arch of the stage, and just beneath the arch of the stage, and just beneath it was a much smaller Union Jack, bearing the coat-of-arms of Canada. The flags of the United States and Britain were intertwined about the speakers' table, while suspended to the rail of each of the front balconies, both to the right and left, were two Union Jacks and an American flag. The Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack were draped side by side over the entrance. When Chairman Britton arose, the spackous Tempis was comfortably filled, and it was noticeable that a majority of the crowd were women. The following named persons were on the stage: *
