Why Katie Was Sorely Puzzled by "Meester Graham."

Through my conflicting relief and dismay at Dicky's ultimatum not to speak to me again until I explained my emotion over the newspaper, one definite fact stood out. I must not risk meeting him at the breakfast table. I had a perfectly legitimate excuse for asking for an early breakfast, and I resolved to take advantage of it.

I remedied the defects which my hurried toilet of the hour before had left. and when I was in perfect readiness for the day went to the kitchen, for I knew from my watch that it was the hour and minute when Katie always appeared there. We have a little family saying that we can set the clocks by Katie.

DR. S. M. THOMAS—NEW ADDRESS, 212 Dundas street, Phone 2085.

Why Katie Was Sorely Puzzled by "Meester Graham."

As I reached one door she came in by own room, putting it to rights noise-the other from the rear stairway. At lessly so as not to awaken Richard Junior who, curled into an adorable pstartled.

"Oh! Misses Graham, vot matter? "Oh! Misses Graham, vot matter?

Anybody seek?"

"No, Katie, but I have to leave extra early this morning. The wife of the school principal is dead, and of course he will not be at school this morning. I must be there unusually early. May I have breakfast before the others? Don't bother—just give me the easiest thing."

The girl's volatile inquisitiveness seized upon words avidly.

"So dot vot dot teacher vomans vanted!" she said excitedly. "Dot old vomans never tell me vun lettle ting," she added resentfully.

"I'll Tell You—"

I almost laughed aloud at the mental vision of my august mother-in-law deigning to take Katie into her confidence. But I repressed even the tiniest smile, as I put my hand on the girl's shoulder.

"I'll tell you all about it when I get home," I promised. "But just now I must think of breakfast."

"Don't you worry about dot breakfast!" Katie woke to efficient action on can be an adorated downstairs again.

To my astonishment I met Dicky in bathrobe and slippers coming up. I paused involuntarily, but he looked directly above my head as if I did not possess a corporal body, and proceeded to his room with as much dignity as this flapping bathrobe would permit. My lips curved into a tender amused smile as I went to the dining room. There is something so little-boyish about Dicky's rages that I cannot help smiling at them sometimes, even though, as in this case, I knew that his wrath would undoubtedly cause me much inconvenience, if not downright unhappiness.

Katle was in the dining room as I entered, arranging the table. Her face held a broad grin as she turned to me. "You know vot I tink, Misses Graham?" she asked, pulling out my chair, indicating with a gesture that my breakfast was ready.

"I can't guess, Katie," I smiled, with an appreciative look at the iced half-acantaloupe which she had set before home," I promised. "But just now I must think of breakfast."

"Don't you worry about dot breakfast!" Katie woke to efficient action on the instant. "But vot in de vorld!" She had turned to take her bungalow apron from its hook, and was looking at its torn places, its rumpled appearance, in dismayed bewilderment.
"Oh. I meant to tell you, Katie. Mr. Graham cooked some supper here last night for Miss Holcombe and me, and he insisted upon wearing your apron. I will buy you another one as soon as I tree minits he coom in and he say he
