THE GREENWOOD PATH.

"Last spring I visited Greenwood Cemetery in Brooklyn, and I found me that there was one path in that great city of the dead from which the grass was always worn. We took that path, and it led us to the grave of Henry George. Here, sometimes with ill-gotten gains, build monuments to themselves before they die. With libraries and colleges they try to purchase immortality. All of these that gold can buy are not worth the eloquent tribute of that beaten path, worn by the feet of pilgrims whose souls have been illumined by the prophet's truth, and whose hearts have been fired by the cause for which he died. Path of the worn by feet that never weary to carry the standard which he raised, that shall be our sign of loyalty.

"I am more to Henry George than to any other man, living or dead. He has given me hope by showing that it is within the power of man to abolish enslaving poverty. He has strengthened my faith by showing me that there is not one ounce of ignorance of natural law, we should find the bounty of nature sufficient for all her children. He has given me a purpose in life, something to work for, which is eminently practical, capable of immediate and progressive application, yet fundamentally in his character, appealing to the highest patriotism and the purest religion.

"There are enough to rear monuments to the heroes of causes long since won. Let us raise a monument of high endeavor to the prophet of this new cause until the truth he brought shall remould our opinion, and our President, the White Horse, teach wisdom to the law-waker, humanity to the priest, and lay the foundations of a truly democratic state, in which it shall be possible for every honest and industrious citizen at least to dwell beneath his own vine or fig tree.

"Such a state, founded on a knowledge of natural law and a respect for human rights, is a monument which we shall re-build to the memory of Henry George."

—Herbert S. Bigelow, Cincinnati, Ohio.
