KING OF ENGLISH COOKS LOVES THE OLD FASHIONS.

Thomas Davey Excludes French From His Menu and Is Firmly Decided That "'Ome Cookin' Is Best"—He Is Seventy-One Years of Age and the Most Celebrated Cook In the Metropolis.

On Easter Eve of the year 1867 Thomas Davey stepped out of the Old Rainbow Tavern, Fleet Street, London, to take a vacation. The next morning at eleven o'clock, instead of carrying out this threat, he donned a white apron in that ancient Arcadia of healthy appetities known throughout the world as "Simpson's-in-the-Strand." At that moment he came into his own; and it is still his own. And although the throne from which he holds sway as chef of the mighty Simpson's is situated two storeys below ground, in a little six by six cnuggery of an office, he ranks with King Nicholas of Montenegro, who rules from many storeys above ground in his tiny mountain fastness, as one of the veteran monarchs of Europe. On the thirty-first of July "Davey" — he lost the "Thomas" long ago—reached seventy-one years of age, the same age as King Nicholas. And again to draw a comparison with the Balkan ruler, he wields his despotic sceptre with an arm that is unshaken by age and yet with a democracy that has brought all the great London Bohemians of the last half century to bend the knee before his chefs d'oeuvre of culinary art.

Did I say chef d'oeuvre? Davey would not be guilty of such a Gallicism. There is not a French word in Simpson's bill of fare, and Davey is a believer in the entente cordiale only to the extent of having the choicest burgundies, clarets, and Chablis listed on the carte de vin—"wine list" it is called at Simpson's.

Davey's motto is that "good English food is food." He has a negligent contempt for the menus of Paris and Berlin which have found their way into many parts of the British metropolis. As he expresses it in his unalloyed Cockney — for Davey is born well within the sound of Bow Bells — "Wot a man eats makes a man. Well, look at them Frenchies and Germans; then tyke a look at an Englishman. That settles it. 'Ome cookin' for me!"

Davey's long observance of his motto in his daily life has brought him rotundity of figure.

Davey's rotundity is scarcely surprising; for Davey's menus for Davey are not slender ones. His eyes twinkled more merrily than ever as he suggested that he would probably partake of the following fare for his dinner that evening: As a starter, Scotch hotch-potch soup, which is mutton liquor with chopepd parseley and cream; then some salmon with lobster sauce, or "a bit o' white bait"—these merely as appertisers; the real hunger allayer to be roast chicken and bath chap, which is curvy pig's face, or some roast duckling and peas; "and then," said Davey, "I should top off with some currant and raspberry tart with lemon pudding and cream, with a savory of bloaters' roes on toast." This, with some "stout and bitter," and fine old tawny port.

Because of Davey's distinctly English menus he has an enormous following of foreigners, and in summer the restaurant is crowded with Americans. When the "old Simpson's" fell before the house-breaker nine years ago and a new and palatial Simpson's rose phoenix-like from its fall, Davey scrupulously continued the old traditions, and the joints still go round on wheeled trays to each guest, the coffee is just the same, and the old romance is still there, even though this year the place was again enlarged to meet the requirements.

Many attempts have been made, especially to lure Davey away. Great restaurants have vied in offers for his services, asking him to "name his own price." And then delegations of Simpsonites have gone down the two flights of stairs to wait with bated breath for Davey's decision. But as Davey explained, with just a suspicion of a quaver in his voice, "a quarter of a century ago, when I was still young and foolish, they might have tempted me. But it's too late now. And as an Englishman, I'm still able to back my cooking against that of any man in the world."

Most Modern Things Ancient.

Discovery of a prehistoric Turkish bath in Ireland suggests again the thought that most of the things about which modern civilization boasts are ancient. An automatic machine was in use to supply sacrificial water in an ancient Greek temple. Queen Maria Theresa had an elevator in her house at Luxembourg at least as early as 1777, and an omnibus was running in Paris in 1662. In 1667 Robert Hooke conveyed sounds to a distance by distended wire—telephoned, in fact.

Don't Neglect your Cough.

You may dislike taking medicine—but coughs are best cured without medicine. The modern treatment is "Catarrhozone"—it isn't a drug—it's a healing vapor, full of pine essences and healing balsams. It spreads over the surfaces that are weak and sore from coughing. Every spot that's congested is healed, irritation is soothed away, phlegm and secretions are cleaned out, and all symptoms of cold and catarrh are cured. Investment News

Halifax, September 12th, 1913.

Have YOU seen this booklet?

Perhaps you have not noticed our recent references to it in this column. Or, if you have, possibly indifference or procrastination has prevented you from accepting our repeated offer to send a copy anywhere on request. In either case, we hope that you will stop and consider if the booklet would not be useful to have.

It explains a short cut to investing.

And any man who has $20 and can save $5 a month will find that this "short-cut" enables him to start investing AT ONCE. For those who have more and can save more the plan is elastic enough to suit them as well. It permits them to spread their investments over a wider field and thus secure safety through diversification.

It's a common-sense plan that you will readily understand and appreciate. May we not NOW have the pleasure of sending you the explanatory booklet?

THE DAY'S WORK.

The day's work counts—
It isn't what
You mean to do a week ahead;
It isn't what you know you'll gain
When all annoyances have fled;
It isn't what you dreamed and planned—
Such hopes are but a phantom band—
The day's work counts.

The day's work counts—
The foot you gained
Since yonder sun dispelled the dark,
Next week, next month, next year are vain—
Unto the present summons hark;
How have you fared aboard to-day morn
In garnering life's oil and corn?
The day's work counts.

The day's work counts—
It isn't much
The gain of those few paltral hours;
But be content if there be shown
Some product of those sacred powers
Which guide each mind, uphold each hand,
Strive with the best at your command—
The day's work counts.

CHAPTER IV.

THE SOLDIER FINDS AN UNTRODDEN VALLEY.

MEADE BURRELL had experienced a profound sense of pity for Necia upon learning her father's relation to Aluna, but this also largely vanished when he found that the girl was entirely oblivious to its significance. He had tried her in many subtle ways and found that she regarded the matter innocently, as customary, and therefore in the light of an accepted convention, who he is; used to hear of him in the Coeur d'Alenes."

"That's him I was talking to," said the miner. "He's an old friend of mine, and he's going to locate here."

Burrell thought he saw Lee wink at the trader, but he was not sure, for at that moment the man of whom they were speaking re-entered. Lee introduced him, and the three men shook hands. While the soldier fell into easy conversation with the newcomer, Gale gazed at him narrowly, studying him as he studied all men who came as strangers. As he was doing so Aluna entered, followed by Johnny and Molly. She had come for sugar and asked for it in her native tongue. Upon her exit Stark broke off talking to the lieutenant and turned to the trader.

"Your squaw, Mr. Gale?"

The old man nodded.

"Pah-Ute, eh?"

"Yes. Why, do you savvy the talk?"

"Some. I lived in California once."

"Where?" The question came like a shot.

"Oh, here and there! I followed the mother lode for a spell."

"I don't recall the name," said the trader after a bit.

"Possibly. Where were you located?"

"I never lit on any one place long enough to call it home."

It seemed to Burrell that both men were sparring cautiously in an indirect, impersonal manner.

"Those your kids, too, eh?" Stark continued.

"Yes, and I got another one besides—older, a girl."

"She's a 'pip,' too," said "No Creek" Lee fervently. "She's plumb beautiful."

"All of them half breeds?" questioned Stark.

"Sure." The trader's answer was short, and when the other showed no intention of pressing the subject further he sauntered away, but no sooner was he out of hearing than Stark said: "Humph! They're all alike."

"Who?"

"Squaw men."

"This one ain't," Lee declared. "He's different. Ain't he, lieutenant?"

"He certainly is," agreed Burrell. This was the first criticism he had heard of Necia's father, and, although Stark volunteered no argument, it was plain that his opinion remained unaffected.

The old man went through the store at the rear and straightway sought Aluna. Speaking to her with unwonted severity in the Pah-Ute language, he said:

"I have told you never to use your native tongue before strangers. That man in the store understands."

"I only asked for sugar to cook the beans with," she replied.

"True, but another time you might say more; therefore the less you speak it the better. He is the kind who sees much and talks little. Address me in Siwash or in English unless we are alone."

Suddenly she dropped her work and earnestly and with such evident effect as to alter Stark's plans on the moment, for when Runnion entered the store shortly Stark spoke to him quickly, following which they both hurried back to the steamer and saw to the unloading of much additional freight and baggage. From the volume and variety of this merchandise it was evident that Mr. Stark would in nowise be a burden to the community.

Burrell was not sufficiently versed in the ways of mining camps to know exactly what this abrupt change of policy meant, but that there was something in the air he knew from the mysterious manner of "No Creek" Lee and from the suppressed excitement of Doret and the trader. His curiosity got the better of him finally, and he fell into talk with Lee, inquiring about the stranger by way of an opening.

"That's Ben Stark. I knew him back in the Cassiar country," said Lee.

"Is he a mining man?"

"Well, summat. He's made and lost a bank roll that a greyhound couldn't leap over in the minin' business, but it ain't his reg'lar graft. He run one of the biggest places in the northwest for years."

"Saloon, eh?"

"Saloon and variety house—seven bartenders, that's all. He's the feller that killed the gold commissioner. Of course that put him on the hike again."

"How do you mean?"

"Well, he had a record as long as a sick man's drug bill before he went into that country, and when he put the commissioner away them Canadian officials went after him like they was killin' snakes, and it cost him all he had made to get clear. If it had happened across the line the coroner's jury would have freed him, 'cause the commissioner was drunk and started the row. But it happened right in Stark's saloon, and you know Canucks is stronger than vitriol for law and order. Not bein' his first offense, it went hard with him."

"He looks like a killer," said Burrell.

"Yes, but he ain't the common kind. He always lets the other man begin, and therefore he ain't ever done time."

"Come, now," argued the lieutenant, "if it were the other man who invariably shot first, Stark would have been killed long ago."

"I don't care what would have happened, it ain't happened, and he's got notches on his gun till it looks like a cub bear had chawed it. If you was a western man you'd know what they say about him. 'The bullet ain't been run to kill him.' That's the sayin'. You needn't grin. There's many a better man than you believes it."

"Who is it that the bullet hasn't been run to kill?" said the trader's deep voice behind them. He had finished with his duties and now sauntered forward.

"Ben Stark," said Lee, turning. "You know him, John?"
