CHATHAM, - - - SEPTEM BER 22, 1881.

The late President of the United States.

The President of the United States is dead. He was shot with a revolver by the assassin, Guiteau, on Saturday, July 2nd, in the depot of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway, Washington, as he was about to start for New York, where he expected to meet his wife. One ball entered his arm and another his body, lodging just above the left hip one of the most unprovoked and horrible crimes ever recorded.

At the same time the Charybdis, has only and ordinary capstan, and at least sixty men would be required to raise the auchors. Even if the Dominion Government will be difficulty in finding a suitable physical condition when shot, and had all the chances which a previously well regulated life could give him, together with a mind of great hope and fortitude, the constant irritation of the wound, like an ever-wakeful and insidious e nemy, gradually weakened his body and produced fatal blood-poisoning.

The Ministor of Marine and Fishering and the same time the Charybdis, has only and ordinary capstan, and at least sixty men would be required to raise the anchors. He taught in the West, and took quite an interest in public affairs, was a bright, clever, observant young man, and in 1859, when only twenty-eight years old—being then President of Hiram College—was sent to the State Senate, the country being then alive on the question of slavery. The Southern States seeded while he was here. He was one of the first to spring to arms, and Governor Dennison gave him command of an Ohio regiment. He served in the war with distinction, and if he did hot become a great General proved himself to be a successful commander, rising gradually, step by step reaching his zenith in the battle of Chickamauga, where he was chief of the staff to Bocernary, and gained that General's public thanks, and, soon after, the commission from the War Department of a Major-General. In 1863 he was sent to Congress from Ohio, and wh n, on December 4, he took his seat in the Heuse of Representatives he was the youngest member of that body. His record was a fine one. Slowly but surely, his honesty, carnestness, ability won upon the House, and his moderation gave him much influence. His district continued to send him to Congress, but to follow his public services minutely would be to follow a long record of public specches, votes and acts on all the great questions which for the last fifteen years have agitated the United States. When Blaine was sent to the Senate, Garfield became leader of the Republicans in the House, and on all the great questions arising under his leadership, he gave entire satisfaction to his constituents and to his magnify patronage bestowed upon her, in her public capacity, into attentions merited on purely social grounds. But if she did fall into such an error, or yentured to make capital out of the auccess of her London receptions, it satisfaction to his constituents and to his party.
