HATHAM, N. B., - - FEBRUARY 15, 1894. A STRANGE TALE.

It was at our last promotion dinner at the Military Circle. Of course the conversation turned on those who had disappeared—the dead—with that "Don't you remember?" which is like a refrain to those banquets filled with recollections of the past. We were at the psychological moment when, through the action of good wines and of digestion, one feels a heightened nervous sensibility producing a peculiar spiritual state.

gestion, one feels a heightened nervous sensibility producing a peculiar spiritual state.

"And D'Iramond," said Chavoye. "You recollect D'Iramond!"

Suddenly grave, Commander Faber said: "Gentlemen, I was then captain of the Seventeenth chasseurs, and I declare to you I cannot think of the affair without feeling the distress that seizes you before problems that our reason refuses to comprehend."

"Tell us the particulars. We want the details!" was the cry all around.

"Well, gentlemen, it was five years ago. We were then at St. Germain, the most adorable of garrisons. Mornings in the forests, joyous breakfasts at mess, filrtations on the terrace and at night the grand life of Paris. Captain d'Iramond, with his name, his great fortune, his elegance and graceful swagger, held his own brilliantly amid our mad revels, always the last at supper and the first in the saddle.

"Suddenly everything changed. The Duchess d'Iramond died of aneurism of the heart. From the moment when the captain had no longer his mother, mamma, as he said with a filial tenderness, a touching contrast in the mouth of that big mustachioed boy, from the day when he could not go to her from time to time to recover from our dissipations, he was not himself. He ceased to go to Paris, and beyond the duties of the service he never left home, where he remained for hours before a portrait of the duchess painted by Cabanel.

"He became more and more taciturn and more and more concentrated in himself. One fine winter morning, going to his house on the way to the maneuver, I found him especially agitated.

"You will laugh at me,' he said at once, him especially agitated.

"'You will laugh at me,' he said at once, 'but the most extraordinary adventure has happened to me,'

"'What was it?'

"You know Father Vincent? Imagine ure up above to madam, the duchess."

"Then I made no further objections.
Much affected, I confessed and received the sacrament. Perhaps the priest had an hal-lucination. Perhaps he had been swayed by a resemblance. Anyway it is done, and gow forward for the maneuver.'
"I remember that it was cold and dry, like today. D'Iramond mounted a superb chestnut that he had bought the day previous. We went off at full trot to join the classes on the terrace, and the hard ground watch in a stallie near the stallie and the same provided the gueer.'

"We reached the square, answered the roll call and joined our squadron. At that moment a recruit lost control of his horse and came charging upon us. The poor boy had completely lost his wits and thought of nothing but to cling to the pommel of his saddle. The shock was terrible. My his saddle. The shock was terrible. My army horse, an old stager used to such surprises, never flinched, but D'Iramond's chestnut, alarmed, bounded wildly and fell prostrate. In one second I saw a confused mass, a horse that after desperate struggles got up, and on the ground my unfortunate friend, senseless, his skull broken by a blow from his horse's hoof. By a deplorable chance the doctor was not there.

"The wounded man was taken to St. Germein in the sutler's warpen and when Germain in the sutler's wagon, and when at last he could be cared for it was too late. He died that night at 5 o'clock without having uttered a word, without recovering consciousness, and I, who knew the story of the priest, I insisted upon adding to the announcement of his death: 'Provided with the sacraments of the church.' Now—if one were superstitious!' There was a silence; then big Pouraille eried:

eried:
"The devil take you with your dance of death adventures that give the shudders! Do you want my conclusion? The priest was hired—D'Iramond liked to drink! Gentiemen, let us have coffee, and for the rest of the evening, for pity's sake, let us talk only about the ladies, will you? Otherwise I shall have bad dreams."—From the French.

Numerous experiments made in hospitals and upon heroic scientists who have tals and upon heroic scientists who have permitted tests to be made upon themselves right down to the moment of death, warrant these conclusions: That a dying man may be burned with redhot irous and yet not feel the least pain; that consciousness may remain in the dying almost to the moment of actual dissolution, but that most people generally lose the power of thought long before death; that in cases of death where there seems to be extreme suffering where there seems to be extreme suffering. with writhing and spasms, such pheno na are generally due to reflex muscular ac-tion; also that fear weakens the muscu-lar system and hastens death, while the re-verse may prolong life.—St. Louis Repub-

DOOMED TO DIE.

With pity at my heart, I stood and gazed upon the man before me; a man, a fellow-being, doomed by a merciless court-martial to die; to leave the bright and beautiful world around him, and to be ushered alone into "the valley of the shadow of death." A noble-looking man he was, as he stood there, unmoved amid the enemies that surrounded him, and a haughty, half-defiant, expression rested upon his handsome, daring face. He was a Union spy, captured in the Confederate lines and bearing upon his person treasonable papers sufficient to have condemned a regiment. He had made a good fight, but he was at last overpowered, the papers found upon him, and, after a speedy trial, was condemned to die.

after years; and, besides, the spy was atter years; and, besides, the spy was young and nandsonne, by his deportment evidently a gentleman, and his reckless bravery had won my admiration.

Nightfall came upon our camp, and the following morning the spy was to be called out and shot. I had been appointed to take charge of the execution, and, seated in my tent, I was thinking, thinking of the unpleasant duty I was to perform on the morrow.

An Interesting Experiment,
The Mirror and Farmer says: We have an experiment in progress in which five spayed heifers are being fed against five open heifers and both lots against five steers, the entire fifteen head being all of the same age, raised on the same farm, sired by the same bull, and all from the same kind of cows. The object of the experiment is to determine not only the cost of producing beef under these conditions, but the quality of the beef as well. A Beautiful Swiss Custon would see you, if your duties as an officer do not urge to the contrary. Hoping you will grant the favor, I remain, with respect, "NILBUR HAYES."

I carefully read the note over twice, and then said to the orderly: "Say that I will come."

A few moments later, and I stood in the presence of the condemned man. "Mr. Hayes, you sent for me."

"I did, lieutenant; and it was because of your kindness to me during the trial, and also that I saw in your eyes pity for my fate."

"Id ofeel for you, from my heart I do; and sincerely wish I had not the unpleasant duty devolving upon me of ordering your execution to morrow."

"I have a favor to ask of you, sir; to please order the guard to remove some distance from the tent, as it is a confession I wish to make."

I gave a command to the guard to rettre a few paces, and returning to the tent, Hayes at once began:

"I am no spy, sir, but am condemned under circumstantial evidence. I came into the Confederate lines to visit my mother, who lives in the south, although she is Union in her feelings. After a visit to her of a few days I started to return, and by the road-side came upon a dying man clad as a Confederate soldier. Imagine my surprise to recognize in him a noted spy of our own army, and also recognizing me, he informed me that he had been wounded the night before, by being fired upon by a party of Confederate cavalry, and had ridden on until he could go no further. He knew he was to die, and intrusted to my care the papers he had about him. I watched over the poor fellow until he died, and then hollowing out a shallow grave,

"Left him alone in his glory," and proceeded on my way.

Idealists are persons who profess to deny the existence of material things, and claim that ideas, beliefs and facts are all that there are in the world. For example, we are never ill; we only fancy or believe that we are. If we had full faith that we were well, we would be so. There is something in the ideas, for every one knows that the mind has much to do with the condition of the body. It is entirely possible to cure some diseases by persistently believing that they do not exist and acting accordingly. But all maladies will not yield to such treatment.
