BISHOP MEDLEY.

So much has been said of the life work and labors of Bishop MEDLEY, and so many tributes have been paid to his worth, that Progress can say little that will be of interest to those who knew and esteemed the dead prelate. Living among the people of this province for nearly half a century, he became endeared to those of his own faith and honored by others of all creeds. He has accomplished much for the church in this diocese. He came hither before there was a railway or telegraph line in the country, and to conditions of life wholly new to him. More than that he came to a people whose ways, methods and thoughts, were essentially different from anything he had been accustomed to in his native England. It was a sharp transition, and there was much which must have discouraged a man of less energy, persistence, and it must be added, faith in his Master's work. He saw his line of duty and followed it, though his road at the outset was far from a smooth one. There were many from whom protestantism in their hearts than ecclesiastical knowledge in their heads, who viewed him with distrust as a follower of PUSEY; and it seemed to them that from Puseyism to Romanism the way was short and sure. Now and then one finds a pamphlet or a newspaper of those times in which good men waxed violent in their denunciation of this thing or that which seemed to them fraught with danger to the church which they perforce called catholic but strongly asserted was protestant. The bishop was wiser than they, and in time they learned that he had not come to sow discord, but to unite his people more firmly in the essentials of the faith, and to broaden and deepen the foundations of the church in this part of the world. The cathedral begun and finished by him, in the face of discouragement and difficulties, is a type of his work in the diocese at large. He governed wisely and well. In a church which can comprehend belief from those who are in effect universalists to those who practically believe in transubstantiation, it requires a wise and prudent man to hold the balance between the opposing forces and to be equally honored by all. Such a man was Bishop MEDLEY. While ever the defender of the faith once for all delivered to the saints, and in no point uncertain in his doctrine, he by precept and example preserved harmony when one less judicious might have opened the door to discord. The growth of the church of England in New Brunswick, its strength and its harmonious union today, testify of his labors. He has gone to his rest full of years and honor, leaving a memory that will be venerated by those who knew him, and by their children's children.

Simple and unaffected in all his ways as an individual, he held in high honor the office to which he was consecrated. He was esteemed as a man and venerated as a bishop. The people liked him for his plain and kindly manner; those of cultured tastes admired him as a scholar of more than common rank; while business men of all creeds recognized in him an able organizer and never tiring worker. Above all, he was a christian as thoroughly as he was a gentleman. He has lived a life of which a noble record must remain; he leaves behind him the memory of many and singular virtues.

NO HARM IN PRECAUTION.

It is doubtless a good thing that there is what is known as a cholera scare on this side of the ocean just now. Scares are dangerous when an epidemic is around, as nervous people are apt to be frightened to death whether they have the disease or not. It is said to have been so in St. John in 1854, and it is probably true of all kinds of plagues that the people with the most rational courage, which is very different from rashness, are least likely to be subjects of attack.

It is, however, a very different thing to have a scare before the disease reaches the country. It has a wholesome effect in leading to precautions which would not otherwise be taken. The stimulus given to the authorities of both the United States and Canada by the reports from Europe has caused measures to be taken by which it is quite possible the epidemic may be kept out of the country. A rigorous quarantine, inconvenient as it may be in some respects, is the first step towards the prevention of the pestilence in this country, and it seems quite certain that the precautions will not be relaxed as long as danger exists.

Despite of all precautions, however, the cholera may be brought to this continent, though the danger of it reaching the proportions it gained in Germany seem very remote. In any city of importance there will be special efforts made to preserve the best possible sanitary conditions and a recurrence of the terrible visitations of years ago can hardly be expected at the worst. If individuals everywhere will feel that they are part of a general board of health and literally "keep their dooryards clean," as well as striving to preserve the ordinary and obvious rules of health, America will have little to fear. The scare in advance of the trouble will take the place of a panic during the trouble.

It is rather early yet, in this part of the world, to be on the look out for symptoms and to be hunting up cholera cures, but it can never be out of order for anybody to keep his system and his surroundings in a condition consonant with the laws of health and order. That seems to be the only practical advice to be given at the present moment. There is no need for alarm yet, and there may not be, but there is abundant room for precaution by individuals as well as governments.

THE FALLEN HERO.

The people of this continent, or it is to be feared a very large proportion of them, are bowing down to a new hero in the person of JAMES J. CORBETT. This gentleman's claim to distinction is that he has beaten JOHN L. SULLIVAN and is the champion fighter of the world. When he returned to New York from the scene of his victory at New Orleans, fully five thousand men, women and children, greeted him with their plaudits as he stepped from the train. Possibly nearly as large a number would have met him if he had come to St. John, for thousands hung around the streets the night of the fight and shouted and howled until the last bulletin had come over the wires. All in all, Mr. CORBETT would very likely come out ahead were a plebiscite taken to learn who was the most popular man in America today.

SULLIVAN was such a notorious brute that CORBETT shines in comparison as a brute of greater intelligence and superior skill. If there is anything honorable about the occupation of a professional pugilist, he seems entitled to full credit. Some of his admirers indeed claim that he is, "a perfect gentleman," and possibly he is, from their point of view. He is, at least, the acknowledged champion so far as the slugging of man by man goes, and there is no doubt he considers that a higher honor than if he were to be the successor of JOHN G. WHITTIER, whose death was almost overlooked by the world in its excitement over the fight at New Orleans.

It is the way of the world to trample on its idols when they have fallen from their pedestals, and no exception is made in the case of SULLIVAN. There seems no sympathy with him in his hour of darkness, and there is probably little sorrow save by those who staked their money on his bovine strength. The press and the people unite to jeer at him as the Philistines mocked the fallen SAMSON, but it is out of his power to avenge himself as that erring hero of old did. The comparison between the ancient and modern idols in other respects as well. SAMSON owed his downfall to the wiles of a woman, while SULLIVAN ascribes his defeat to "too much booze." It may be added that the weight of years and the failure of a trainer to sufficiently reduce abdominal adipose tissue were immediate and important elements in the disaster.

To the reflecting mind there is an element of sadness in the fact that everybody is down on SULLIVAN. He was not lovable, it is true, but it is only a little time since he was an almost idolized hero of the masses. His triumphs were looked upon as adding lustre to the name of the United States. He was better known the world over than was GEORGE WASHINGTON, and thousands in his native land could give the dates of his conquests, though they might be ignorant of the dates of the great battles of the civil war, or fail to tell the year in which ABRAHAM LINCOLN was shot. Now all is changed. The newspaper that used to shout his praises extolled in his defeat, and the people do likewise. He is to have a benefit sparring match in New York tonight, but even in that the name of CORBETT the champion is the leading attraction on the notices of the affair. There is neither pity nor love for the late hero from Boston. His occupation as the knocker-out of all comers is gone, and is not likely to come again. He is still an undeniably dangerous man for any of his hosts of critics to encounter, but he is no longer the champion of the world.

Yet amid the howling of the mob at SULLIVAN there is something to be said in his behalf. He was a brute because he was born so. Heredity and environment combined to make him utilize his great strength to maul his fellow men. In the intervals between his conquests, indeed, he made efforts to follow other lines of occupation, but without rising to the height of financial success. He opened a very elaborate bar-room in Boston, but closed it again at a loss. He has tried the stage and authorship, but his final resort for ready cash has been the fictitious CORBETT, on the contrary, abandoned a vocation that in some parts of the world is a passport to the inner circle of society. He was a bank clerk, and had he remained such might have been respected not only for his style of clothes, as are many in that line, but for his shape as well. He, however, preferred to be a clear and unadorned sport, and has become famous for the scientific skill with which he has slugged the once greatest slugger on earth. As between SULLIVAN who became a prize fighter because he was born so, and CORBETT, who became one through choice, the ex-champion from Boston would have slightly the advantage in a claim to be respected, did either of the two merit such a thing as respect.

It is, however, quite safe to assert that both of these gentlemen are willing to forego any sentiment as to respect provided they continue to have fame and its adjunct in cash receipts. In this the indications are that Mr. CORBETT has prospects much superior to those of Mr. SULLIVAN.

Reports from France imply that while champagne will be excellent in quality this year it will be below the average in quantity. This might be thought bad news for those who anticipate a good time during the world's fair year, but whatever may be the facts in France the quantity of champagne in America will be as large as ever. The quality is entirely another question. That is the difference between the districts where wine is made and where it, or something like it, is consumed.

It is announced that Mr. SKINNER has resigned his seat in the commons, as Progress predicted, a few weeks ago, that he was sure to do. He had the choice of taking this course or of losing his position as judge of probates, and he wisely chose the place which was both lucrative and permanent. The contest for Mr. SKINNER'S place may possibly be a warm one.

Among the gifts sent to the victorious slugger CORBETT were floral wreaths from admirers at a distance. The relation between flowers and prize fighting is not very apparent to the average mind, but no doubt CORBETT can appreciate it. Another gift was a monster watermelon which seemed somewhat more in accordance with the fitness of things.

PERTINENT AND PERSONAL.

Ex-Ald. Stephen, of Halifax, returned this week from a ten weeks visit abroad. During his trip Mr. Stephen combined business with pleasure, and visited London, Paris, Berlin, Glasgow, and other cities. Mr. Stephen says the outlook for the autumn trade is exceedingly bright, and prophesies a busy season for the N. S. Furnishing Co., of which he is the president.

A Momentous Question.

The question now arises, will there be any cranberries this season, or will poor Grevillians have to preserve dulce and pumpkin parings instead; which I don't not would make good winter eating.—Parabola Leader.

The Scott Act in Moncton.

A report was in circulation yesterday that a man named Somers had been dragged by a glass of intoxicants, obtained in an uptown saloon, but it appears that it was only a case of too many drinks before breakfast.—Times.

All the Force Off Duty.

Two or three town loafers were faulting passing female on Wednesday night, when a citizen taking notice of the fact, went up to the Kioskop and sent the policeman taking tickets. This left the town without police protection.—N. G. Enterprise.

This Should Stir Up the "Chief."

A "Green Goods Circular" has again been received by us from another of the gang of scoundrels in New York who are working this "recally" fraud. We commend the special attention of the Chief of Police to that ditty these audacious criminals.—Liverpool Times.

The Dark Side of City Life.

A vicious dog owned at York Point should be looked after by the police. Yesterday the dog caught hold of the dress of a lady who was passing along Mill street, tearing it badly.—Sun.

IS NOW BISHOP OF FREDERICTON.

Rev. H. Tully Kingston Will be Duly Installed at an Early Day.

Immediately upon the death of the Most Reverend John Medley, the Right Reverend and Hollingworth Tully Kingston became Bishop of Fredericton. The succession is fixed by law, but the canon provides that before the new bishop can perform any episcopal act within the diocese he must make a declaration before the Metropolitan of Canada and be duly installed.

This ceremonial will take place with as little delay as possible. It is provided that in event of the death of the Metropolitan the senior bishop of the ecclesiastical province of Canada shall act in his place.

and that within three months he shall call a convocation of the house of bishops to elect a Metropolitan. As the provincial synod is now in session at Montreal the election will take place at once, and Bishop Lewis, of Ontario, will be the choice. He was graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1847, and was ordained priest at Armagh, Ireland, 1849. He was consecrated bishop at Kingston, Ont., March 25, 1862.

Bishop Kingston is a graduate of Trinity college, Cambridge, and is now 57 years of age. He was consecrated bishop at Fredericton on July 10th, 1881, and was the first anglican bishop consecrated in the maritime provinces. Before coming to this country, he was vicar of Good Easter, Essex, Eng., and prior to that time he had been vice-principal of Salisbury Theological college and curate of St. Andrews, Wells street, London. Eight years before coming to New Brunswick, he had been invited to come to Lennoxville, by Rev. Dr. Nichols, of that place, but declined the invitation. He is well known as a learned theologian and the author of several treatises which have been most favorably received. He was the choice of Bishop Medley, to whom he was recommended by most tried and intimate friends. He has amply fulfilled the expectations of those who welcomed him to this country, while each year, as his acquaintance was enlarged, has added to the esteem and admiration entertained for him by the people at large. His title will be simply "Bishop of Fredericton," that of "Lord Bishop" ceasing in this diocese with the death of the Metropolitan.

PEN AND PRESS.

A good specimen of an American weekly paper reached Progress this week in The Chronicle of Mount Vernon, N. Y. It is "intensely local," and while published for the special benefit of the people of Mount Vernon contains much of interest to outsiders.

Dangers and Attractions of Port Howe.

TO THE EDITOR OF PROGRESS: Having observed with satisfaction a steadily increasing popularity for that elevation known as Port Howe, and having also noticed with what pleasure the advent of the wood and iron settees was hailed by the frequenters and other visitors to this beautiful sight-seeing natural observatory, I thought the time ripe for drawing attention to the fact of the danger to children—and others who are not children—by the still open though dry "military well," which, though of interest still as an old landmark or other curiosity, should, for the public safety, be either filled in or fenced around. As the Sunday attendance in these parts is constantly increasing as a natural result, so is the danger. If not protected this year, I trust it will be looked after next, as also more seats, if the council could vote another fifty or so for that purpose.

JAY BEE.

Words Worth Pondering Over.

"Be happyth up richer, and knoweth not who shall gather them."—Pa. 29, 6.
From early morn till evening gray,
The throng of workers, grave and gay,
Amid the struggle and the strife,
Frees us to gain a prize in life.
Our effort good is to secure
A name and place which shall endure,
That those held dear, when we are dead,
May not be pressed for daily bread,
Nor humble sphere to wound the mind
Be lot of those we leave behind.
Vain is the effort, care and thought,
For all our store so dearly bought
May scattered be and come to naught.
All worldly treasure will decay,
And hoarded wealth may flee away,
As Holy writ doth plainly say.
Purchase some subtle, selfish friend,
With studied aims and wily smile,
Designing thus a purpose vile,
May rob and wrong, and ruin send,
For his own purpose, use and gain,
Condemns to hardship, toil and pain,
Those whom he hoped he would befriend,
Protect and cherish to life's end.
One only friend to all the same,
True, gracious, constant ever sure,
Who was and is and shall endure,
Is with us now, in Spirit pure,
Jesu, we land Thy holy Name.

—FENO.

WEST END MEN WERE QUIET.

And So There Was a Peaceful Session of the Common Council.

An unusually quiet session of the common council was held Thursday, though all the members were there, with the exception of Ald. Lon. Chesley. Even Ald. Jack put in an appearance and made a brief speech favoring a fire alarm for Carleton. The West End members had an unusually subdued air, and Ald. Davis had nothing to say on any subject. Ald. Baxter had no encounters worth mentioning with the mayor, and Ald. Colwell kept within the bounds of order, while Ald. Smith was as reticent as usual.

Such debates as there were, however, related chiefly to Carleton and its demands for better terms. The ferry question did not come to the front, and that was one reason why there was peace. There was, however, an animated discussion over whether a certain petitioner Stanton should have a lease of a small structure at Sand Point. The lands committee thought he should and so reported. It was then pointed out that the property was in the control of the board of works and should be referred to them. Ald. Barnes rose to defend the land committee and said the council seemed to have the impression that they were a set of innocents. Ald. Knox thought the council should be careful about its leases, as they had already had a case where there had to be an injunction or an injunction or something of the kind to get a man out.

Several motions were made, or rather there was one motion with several additions, like "adding a tail onto a kite," as Ald. Lewis would say. The motion was to refer to the board of works, the amendment to refer with power to act, and the amendment to the amendment to refer with power to act provided Stanton signed an agreement to vacate the premises when required. Several other motions of one kind and another were offered until the situation got so mixed that Ald. Vincent declared he was lost. "I am not a bit lost," replied the mayor confidently, as he undertook to put the motions. Others then wanted this and that explained, until the mayor impatiently exclaimed that they were all thick-headed, and that any school-boy ought to understand the matter. The amendment to the amendment was carried.

The next subject for discussion was a recommendation of the board of works to have St. George and Lancaster streets, Carleton, graded. Neither the board nor the West End members seemed agreed about the matter, and it was finally referred back. During the debate, Ald. Baxter began to cross-examine Ald. Vincent.

"Ald. Baxter," exclaimed the mayor, "this is not a court of law."

"It seems to be one, with you as the judge," retorted the alderman.

"And a judge from whom there is no appeal in this case," responded his worship, whereupon Ald. Baxter smiled and subsided.

The question of a fire alarm system for Carleton was referred to the board of safety, after which Ald. McCarthy made his usual motion to adjourn which was carried.

Will Run Both Stores.

When the Messrs. Marr opened their new millinery establishment last spring in Halifax, it was their intention to consolidate their other store, Le Bon Marche, into it and run one large millinery establishment, but after the spring season's trade they now find that such a change would not be beneficial owing to the increased trade being done in both stores and also because the new premises would not be large enough. It is now their intention to keep both stores open under entirely separate management. The remarkable success of this concern is due to their great knowledge of the business. Their stock is personally selected each season in the best markets and bought for cash, then customers naturally are aware of the fact that they reap the benefit of the close buying and cash discounts of this well known house. Mr. F. A. Marr has just returned from an extended trip, having visited the principal Canadian cities as well as New York and Boston, and purchased very largely for the fall season which will open on Sept. 22, 23 and 24—Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Cameron's Millinery Opening.

Mr. Chas. K. Cameron's millinery opening is announced on the second page of this paper to take place on the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th of this month. The newest and latest styles can surely be found on his counters, and Mr. Cameron's stock is always large and varied enough for all people to select from. His store on King street is so well known that it needs no introduction, but the fact of its being so is due as much to the splendid advertising the proprietor is doing as to the good quality of the goods he keeps in stock.

The "Allandale" in Good Hands.

The announcement that the Allandale house has been sold to Mr. Joseph Rowley is heard with pleasure by all who know that beautiful spot on the road, as well as those who are acquainted with Mr. Rowley. For attractiveness the Allandale place cannot be surpassed or equaled by any resort near the city, and in capable hands like Mr. Rowley's it should increase in public favor. Progress understands that Mr. Rowley proposes to improve the house and place in many respects, and conduct it as a "house of entertainment."

SUSSEX.

Progress is for sale in Sussex by R. D. Bond and Geo. D. Martin.
