STEAMSHIP VALUED AT HALF A MILLION HAULED FROM ROCKS

Excellent Salvage Work at Newfoundland Last Sunday Salvors Each Paid Twenty Dollars an Hour—Arrived at St. John's Under Own Steam Monday.

A steamship worth about half a million of dollars was successfully floated from the south coast of Newfoundland on Sunday last by some clever salvage work, and managed to reach St. John's last Monday morning under her own steam.

The ship went ashore during a thick fog early Saturday morning last, and took the ground hard on a shelving point. Three tides came but still she held hard and fast. Sunday there was an extra high tide and with the help of the steamers Melgie and Petrel, along with a large gang of men, who got ropes out from different sections of the ship to anchors and by the use of the steam winches a united effort was successful in hauling the ship in to deep water. The ship is quite badly damaged forward and was only floated by her tanks in the first and second compartments.

When aground she was in an exposed position, and one hour of a strong northeast wind would have made her a total wreck.

Men from the shore who were employed in assisting to float the ship were paid $20 an hour, or at the rate of $400 a day for their services. This appears to be a rather startling amount but when it is taken into consideration the value of shipping at the present time it is worth the expenditure to save the ship.

The ship has been docked at St. John's where she will undergo repairs.
