Growth of Up River Settlements-Profitable Business with Troops at Fort Frederick.

W. O. RAYMOND, LL. D.

The establishment of Fort Frederick on the west side of the Harbor of St. The establishment of Fort Frederick on the west side of the Harbor of St. John, by Brig. General Monckton, in the fall of the year 1759, contributed not a little to the advantage of the first settlers. The Indians "were disjoined to be troublesome to the English, and the presence of the garrison rendered their situa-tion less lonely and added very greatly to their sense of security. Not only so, but the garrison brought quite an amount of business to the store of Simonds & White. In the old accounts of the year 1764 are to be found the names of Lieut. White. In the old accounts of the year 1764 are to be found the names of Lieut. Gilfred Studholme of the 40th Regt., Lieut. John Marr and Commissary Henry Green. Captain Pierce Butler of the 20th Regt., was in command at Fort Fred-erick the following year and his name also appears in the accounts. For a year or two after the fort was established the garrison was furnished by the provincial troops of Massachusetts, afterwards by detachments of British regiments under various commands. In addition to the trade with the officers and soldiers, Simonds & White furnished wood and other supplies to the garrison, and doubt-less it was not the least satisfactory incident in this connection that the pay-master was "John Bull." The Indians were unreliable customers and bad debts were not infrequent, the white settlers on the river had out little money and their pay was chiefly in shingles, staves, spars, clapboards, musquash and beaver skins; ohn Bull paid cash. n Bull paid cash.

About three years after the arrival of Simonds and White at St. John their

About three years after the arrival of Simonds and White at St. John their trade with the garrison was interrupted by the removal of the troops to Boston in consequence of some riots in connection with the enforcement of the Stamp Act. Mr. Simonds speaks of this circumstance in a letter dated July 25, 1768, in which he wirtes: "The troops are withdrawn from all the outposts in the Province and sent to Boston to quell the mob. The charge of Fort Frederick is committed to me, which I accepted to prevent another person being appointed who would be a toder. I don't know but I must reside in the Garrison, but the privilege of the fisheries on that side of the River and the use of the King's boats will be more who than an equivalent for the inconvenience." The defenceless condition of the port of St. John brought disaster to the settlers there some years later, but of this we shall hear more by and by.

shall hear more by and by. The names of most of the heads of families settled at Maugerville appear in the earlier account books of Simonds & White, and later we have those of the settlers at Gagetown, Burton and St. Anns. In the course of time branches at the company's business seem to have been established at convenient centres up the river, and their account books contain the invoices of goods shipped to Peter Carr, who lived just below Gagetown, to Jabez Nevers of Maugerville, and to Benjamin Atherton at St. Ann's Point. The goods appear to have been sold on commission and returns were made chiefly in lumber furs and produce. The in-

The in-veices of goods shipped to Hazen & Jarvis at Newburport by Simonds & White included pine boards, shingles, clapboards, cedar posts, spars and cordwood, be-sides some 50,000 white and red oak staves, most of these articles having been taken in trade with the settlers on the river. SIMONDS & WHITE." Joseph Garrison it may be observed was the grandfather of William Lloyd Garrison, the celebrated advocate of the bolition of slavery. He was one of the original grantees of Maugerville and drew lot No. 4, opposite Middle Island in Upper Sheffield. He was on the River St. John as early at least as July, 1764, and is said to have been the first of the English speaking race to work the coal mines at Grand Lake. Another early miner was Edmund Price of Gagetown, who in the year 1775 delivered nine chalurons of coal to Simonds & White for which they excuse for a hired man to do but half a day's work in a day if he was furnished with an axe or scythe of that stamp." The next year plans were discussed for the general improvement of the marsh, and a number of indigent Acadians were employ-ed to assist in the construction of a "Running Dike" and aboideau. These Aca-dians probably lived at French Village, near the Kennebecasis, and the fact that they had some experience in dykeing marsh lands shows that they were refugees from the Expulsion of 1755. The situation of the first dyke was not, as now, at the mouth of the Marsh Creek but at a place nearly opposite the gate of the cemetery, where the lake-like epansion of the Marsh begins. The work was completed in August, 1774, by the construction of an aboideau. Those employ-ed in the work were the company's laborers, six or eight Acadians and a number of the Maugerville people-about twenty-five hands in all. William Hazen was at St. John that summer and he and James White gave their personal attendance, of the Maugerville people—about twenty-five hands in all. William Hazen was at St. John that summer and he and James White gave their personal attendance, not in overseeing the work only but in the active and laborious parts thereof," the company providing the implements, tools, carts, several teams of oxen, gundolas and other boats, materials and supplies of every kind including rum for the work-men. This dyke and aboideau served the purpose of shutting out the tide from about 600 acres of marsh land. Ten years later Hazen & White built a new aboi-deau a little above the first one which had fallen into disrepair. A much better one than either was built at the mouth of the creek in 1788 by James Simonds at a cost of £1,300. The House of Assembly voted £100 towards building a bridge at the place and Mr. Simonds agreed to erect a structure to serve the double purpose a cost of £1,300. The House of Assembly voted £100 towards building a bring to the purpose the place and Mr. Simonds agreed to erect a structure to serve the double purpose of a public bridge and aboideau. The width of the structure was 75 feet at the bottom and 25 feet at the top. Not long afterwards Mr. Simonds built here two tide saw-mills. These were not a profitable investment and in 1812 one had fallen into total decay while the other was so much out of repair as to be of little benefit to

After the first Marsh Bridge had been in existence about twenty-five years there arose a controversy as to what proportion of the cost of repairs should be borne respectively by the province, the City of St. John and the proprietors of the marsh. This controversy has continued to crop up at regular intervals during the last century and the end is not yet.

When the Loyalists arrived in 1783 the dyked marsh lands produced about 400 tons of hay, but it was said that "if tilled and ditched they would produce much more." Today the mahsh raises at least four times the quantity of hay named abeve.

After building the first running dyke in 1769, Hazen, Simonds and White continued to devote considerable attention to the task of reclaiming and improv-ing the marsh. In order to have ready access a road was laid out running back of Fort Howe hill and along Mount Pleasant to the marsh. Not far from the present station at Coldbrook they built a house with hovels for cattle and put up and settled a family there. A few years later they built two more houses and settled and settled a family there. As low years after they built two more families there, each with a stock of cattle. The first tenants on the marsh were Stephen Dow, Silas Parker and Jabez Salisbury. The houses built for their accommodation cost from £15 to £30 apiece. About this time or a little later a small grist mill was built at theoutlet of Lily Lake.

He broke the oracles in two And bared the paltry wires and strings; He headed desert wanderings; He led his soul, his cause, his clan, A little from the ruck of things. Once on a time there was a man.

Thrones, powers, dominions block the With episodes and underlings; The meek historian deems them true, Nor heeds the song that Clio sings, The simple central truth that stings The mob to boo, the priest to ban. Things never yet created things. Once on a time there was a man.

A bolt is fallen from the blue, A wakened realm full circle swings Where Dothan's dreamer dreams anew Of vast and forborne harvestings; And unto him an empire clings That grips the purpose of his plan. My lords, what think ye of these things? Once in our time is there a man?
