

BY Mr. MURRAY, ALBEMARLE-STREET.

XLVII.

The HISTORY of ENGLAND. By Mrs. MARKHAM.

A SECOND EDITION, with Wood Engravings, illustrative of Manners, &c., 2 vols. 12mo.

XLVIII.

A DICTIONARY of UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE,

Comprising every word that is to be found in any of the various Encyclopedias which have been published down to the present time, either at home or abroad; and under each word will be given the information and explanations which the ordinary course of conversation in common life render desirable.

Twenty-five closely-printed Volumes, with Plates, in Octavo.

Although there is not, perhaps, an art or science, or any branch of literature within the whole scope of human knowledge, which has not its appropriate dictionary; and although we have numerous and very voluminous encyclopedias which profess to embrace the whole circle of sciences and the arts; there seems to be still wanting, for ready reference to every possible subject that can occur, whether in the course of reading or business, some one comprehensive work, within a moderate compass, and at an easy expense, that will contain and convey the information desired. Such a work, it is presumed, might, by a judicious condensation and alphabetical arrangement of the various subjects, be rendered complete for all purposes of general information, in twenty-four thick octavo volumes.
