

future will be North America. For the same reasons the vast territory of Canada should be the future centre and dominating portion of the British Empire. The truth of this proposition will be apparent from the enumeration of our capacity for supporting population, and a glance at a map of the Empire will then make it still more evident.

I wish I could add a few words on the Rights of Children, on Old Age Pensions and on the Metric System. These and others are plain subjects for action, and perhaps to mention them will be sufficient to suggest their place in the conception of a Modern Nation.
