

NEW SERIES

CHARLOTTETOWN, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1874.

VOL. IV.—NO. 18

THE HERALD

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, BY JOHN CAVEN, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TERMS FOR THE "HERALD": For 1 year, paid in advance, $1.40; for 6 months, 80c; for 3 months, 50c.

Table with 2 columns: Description of advertising rates (e.g., per line, per column) and corresponding prices.

RETAIL PRICES CURRENT.

Table listing various goods (meat, poultry, breadstuffs, fish, boards, etc.) and their current prices.

General Intelligence.

ROME.

From a letter of an American student in Rome, published in the N. Y. Times, we make the following extracts: After speaking of the confiscations of the monasteries and convents, the writer says: 'But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government.'

FRANCE.

The French Government, guided doubtless by the noble spirit of Marshal President MacMahon, has shown that it can be magnanimous to a fallen House. The latest British papers bring the news that an agreement has been entered into between M. Rouher and the French Government by which the Empress Eugenie is to receive a sum of three million francs, payable in annuities, and the Chinese Museum at Fontainebleau, the collection of arms at Pierrefonds, as well as the works of art purchased by the late Emperor, are to be restored to her.

IRELAND.

At the early age of thirty-three a Spanish musket has robbed the world of a life which might have been great, and which certainly promised to be remarkable. Washington Ryan, an Irish Canadian, perished on that eventful day when the crew of the Virginius were massacred in the open square of Santiago amid the wild delights of grandees and savages.

ENGLAND.

A correspondent of the New York World, writing from London, says: 'There is reason to believe that the Tichborne case is very near its end. Yesterday the Court adjourned until December 23, to clear the Christmas holidays; but it is reported that Dr. Lushington has withdrawn from the case. The Lushington case has had the most demoralizing effect. Up to yesterday Lord Rivers, who has stood by the defendant all the while, had furnished the following note with which Dr. Kenney was every morning "refreshed": "Yesterday there was no £5 forthcoming, and it was made known that Lord Rivers had given up his friend. Dr. Kenney did not appear in Court; his assistant counsel, Mr. MacMahon, was not there, and the defendant was represented only by the junior counsel, Mr. Wythe. He informed the Court that Dr. Kenney was "too ill to attend"—at which there was a giggle of merriment heard through the Court room—and that Mr. MacMahon had gone out of town for his Christmas holidays. The Judges were very angry. They consented to the adjournment, but they told Mr. Wythe to say to Dr. Kenney that if he came back to resume his argument after the adjournment they would permit him to speak for only a week longer. He has already spoken for thirty-four days, and six days longer must suffice. The defendant, I understand, has sent a letter to the Judges requesting that he might be allowed to continue his defence himself if all his lawyers abandoned him. Their lordships may permit him to make a short speech, but they will do no more. The defendant says privately that it allows him to speak for six months; but there is no danger of the Judges permitting such an infraction. The Lushington case, as I have said, has destroyed the last hope of an acquittal. I am assured

CANADA.

Competition is waxing strong for the honor of having first proved the practicability of importing Canadian meat into England. The Managing Director of the Colonial and Foreign Meat Supply Company writes to the English journals that his Board, believing that it was quite possible to import fresh meat from Canada, did, in the beginning of last year, send out certain instructions as to packing a trial shipment of beef, and that the same duly arrived in Liverpool in April last, was brought to London and there sold in the Metropolitan Meat Market; that the beef was perfectly sound and sweet—undistinguishable from sound English meat—and in respect of its receipt that effect was duly given, the meat lately received at Liverpool had, it seems, stood the test of fourteen days, whereas that handled by the Meat Supply Company and brought from Toronto, was sold thirty days after packing. Of course, the Company offers its assistance in carrying out the project of supplying English markets with Canadian meats, for the success of such an undertaking is now almost assured. The opening out of an extensive trade in dead meat between the Dominion and the mother country only requires to be entered upon with vigor in order to accomplish beneficial results in the interests of both countries.—Montreal Gazette.

Miscellaneous.

The following story relates to the recent elections in Newfoundland, which in former times were rather noticeable for scenes of violence and disorder that brought disgrace upon the inhabitants. At Barin the Government candidates withdrew without a contest before nomination day, but some of the ruder portion of their supporters were indignant at this, and determined to prevent the nomination of the Opposition candidates by physical force. One of them, Mr. James Winter, was seized by an excited mob when on his way to the hustings, roughly cross-examined by a political orator, and his answers not proving satisfactory, he was forced into a boat and carried off to a settlement some fifteen miles distant. In the struggle his arms were badly hurt. To do them justice, however, his captives behaved kindly to him in the boat, and at the place of his involuntary sojourn he was treated with marked hospitality, and the women, kind-hearted souls, bound up his wounds and soothed his outraged feelings. As midnight he managed to escape in a disguise which some good Samaritan provided for him. Fortunately, his papers were not prevented by this bold stroke. This daring abduction of a candidate has given rise to more laughter than sympathy, and is regarded generally as one of those playful eccentricities which break out at election seasons, and which it is better to wink at than punish. The treatment which the Hon. E. D. Shea met with at Transient Advertisements must be paid for in advance. In all cases, in order to secure insertion. Business Notices in the editorial and news columns will be charged at the rate of 12 cents per line.

Banking Notices. Bank of Prince Edward Island. (Corner of Great George and King Streets.)

Union Bank of P. E. Island. (North Side Queen Square.)

Summerside Bank. Central Street, Summerside, P. E. Island.

Farmers Bank, Rustico, P. E. Island.

NEW LUMBER YARDS, LUMBER SHEDS AND Work Shop, combined.

I WISH to inform my customers both in town and country, that I have on hand a large quantity of Lumber of all Sorts, under cover and perfectly dry.

RAISINS! 200 BOXES, fresh and good, AT "ITALIAN WAREHOUSE."

Business Notices. P. CONNICK, AUCTIONEER & BROKER, TIGNISH, P. E. ISLAND.

RONALD MACDONALD, COMMISSION MERCHANT, AUCTIONEER.

RONALD McLEAN, Bailiff, of Souris East.

SHANKS & SMITH, SHIP AND PRODUCE BROKERS, FLOUR.

GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, Charlottetown, P. E. Island.

F. M. CAMPBELL, GENERAL MERCHANT, Auctioneer & Broker.

JOSEPH CREAMER, Physician & Surgeon.

then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was then passing. The rector, hearing of the affair informed the chief of police, who expressed his regret at the occurrence, and promised that he should not happen again. For a long time after, the students were met at the Villa every day by two policemen, who escorted them into the Villa and detained them from further insult.

But not even all this spoliation of monasteries and convents will satisfy the rapacity of this diabolical government. An edict sanctioned with all the legal formalities has been published, I understand, though not yet enforced, whereby all the property of the three great basilicas of Rome, St. Peter's, St. John Lateran's and St. Maria Maggiore's is confiscated. This property is spread over many parts of Italy, and is the accumulation of donations testamentary and otherwise that have been made for the basilicas for centuries. It is of immense value. It affords the means of keeping the basilicas in repair, etc., and supports the Canons attached to them.

In this way the spoliation of ecclesiastical property will continue till the poor old Pontiff will be forced eventually to quit the Vatican palace to make room for Victor Emmanuel. First he will be deprived of his precious museums and galleries on the pretext that these do not belong to the Church, or the Pope, but to the Italian people, and thus restricted to a small portion of the Vatican, he will be obliged, in order to preserve his personal liberty, to remove to a healthy and less healthy habitation, probably to the Lateran palace which is very small and situated in a very unhealthy part of the city.

Rome under the Pope's rule has had an essentially religious character which impressed itself deeply on every Catholic heart within the circuit of its influence. To where you might there was always something to excite your devotion and animate your faith. The simple and confiding piety of the Roman people, who, when they do pray, pray in downright earnestness, though in a very childlike way is not the least edifying observation that one makes in Rome. Scarcely a store is there in the whole city, no matter how small, which has not its lovely images, its pictures, or its statues, its hard to see how the Romans can continue unacquainted with the many religious influences which pervade their city. If it be said that I have met on various occasions specimens of the rising generation of Catholics in Italy, it is absolutely impossible to conjecture how wicked it will be. Boys, scarcely old enough, one would think, to be capable of a malignant feeling, I have seen, who are as thoroughly imbued with hatred for the priesthood as old Garibaldi himself; I may exaggerate a little.

A couple of Sundays ago, the first time that we have been insulted since I came to Rome, returned to my hotel, we happened to get in front of a band of soldiers who were coming down the Via dell'Unita from the Quirinal. As is usual in such cases, a great crowd of boys had gathered around the music which headed the troop, and they saw us they began to shout and yell, and hiss at us, like a pack of young devils. The blood tingled in our cheeks. We could do nothing but take off our hats and salute them.

This infuriated the young ruffians the more. They began to hoot and hiss more fiercely, and never left off till we reached our college, which, fortunately, was within a minute's walk.

Yesterday we met another such crowd of boys in the Villa Borghese, where we usually spend our recreation on holiday days playing ball. After we had commenced our game, they came into the ball-field. Afraid lest the ball might strike and injure any of them we told them to clear out of the way. They refused to do it, and immediately began to vituperate us, threatening to hang us, imprison us, etc. This threat, from boys of their size and the manner in which they made it, was really amusing. The name they had for us, and it is become a general one for ecclesiastics now, has the signification of a certain black beetle—the most indefatigable worker of his race—which frequently meets on country roads with a great round ball of something which he manages to roll by his hind legs. Last year it happened that on several occasions the students had stoned first at them by a set of middle sized lads who made it a point to meet them at the entrance to the Villa. The students threatened to thrash the fellows, but they never could catch them in the act of throwing, and when accused of doing so the rascals always denied it. One day, however, one of our students, hearing a stone coming after him, turned suddenly around and caught the fellow who had sent it. He thrusted him, and would have given the account of his desert, had it not been for the intervention of a gentleman who was