Descendants of Adam All.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A young girl from a small town, who had always had a great interest in Society—the kind you spell with a capital S—b ut who had never come any closer to it than reading newspaper accounts of his doings, married a man with some money and went to a fashionable hotel, at a famous watering place for her honeymoon.

She had chosen that particular hotel because she had been told it was always thronged with the wealthiest and most fashionable people from all over the country. And she wanted an opportunity to see with her own eyes some of these splendid creatures of whom she read so long.

When she came home all her friends especially those who had shared her avid interest in society columns, were eager to hear about her experiences.

And this is what she told them: "The hotel was magnificent and it was a very beautiful place, but I must say I was disappointed in the people. I had expected to see such splendid looking people, and they were really quite commonplace, just like the folks we meet here at home. Were they specially dressed? Yes, a few of them. But a great many of them were quite ordinary clothes, and some even had frumpy things that I wouldn't want to wear myself."

Her auditors were astonished. Was she sure Society—with a capital S—really went to that hotel? They ventured to ask.

Indeed it did, she told them indignantly. Hadn't she read several of the most sacred names right in the hotel register?

Now what do you think of that? Real Society—with the biggest kind of a capital S—actually looking just like other people.

Wedding Bells at Bonne Bay.

ROBERTS—MARTIN.

A very interesting wedding took place here on the 7th inst., the contracting parties being Mr. Roland Roberts, a prominent young merchant of Woody Point, and Miss Emily Martin, daughter of Mr. James Martin of Curzon Village. The groom, with certain others and attended by Mr. M. Jenkins, of H. M. Customs, who acted as best man, left by motor boat for Birch Head, where the ceremony was performed. It was the wish of the groom to be married at this settlement, as he had worked there for years as Catechist. In a short while the bride arrived attended by her father and Messrs. E. Halliburton, S. Gallig, C. Tucker, M. Taylor, V. E. Butler. The bride was becomingly dressed in white silk with trimmings, the bridesmaids being dressed to match. The marriage service was performed by the Rev. G. H. Maidment who was recently placed in charge of the mission, the bride being given away by her father. After this the bridal party embarked for Woody Point where they arrived amidst musketry and showers of rice and received the hearty congratulations of all present. They then repaired to home of the bride's father where the guests were entertained; after all had done justice to the sumptuous repast provided, the health of the bride and groom was proposed by the Rev. G. H. Maidment who spoke of the many excellent qualities of the happy couple and the pleasure it had afforded him to make them one. The groom responded and in a few words on behalf of the bride and himself thanked the rev. gentleman and the company for their kindness and good wishes, and also for the many valuable presents which they had received. He then proposed the health of the bridesmaids who returned thanks through the best man who made reference to the fact that they, probably being impressed by the proceedings of the day, would in due time follow the example of the bride, he then proposed the health of the guests which was duly drunk and responded to by Mr. W. E. V. Squires, of Norris Point. We wish Mr. J. M. Roberts many happy years of wedded life, and trust that success and happiness will ever attend them on their journey of life.

BERLIN, Oct. 17. The new naval Zeppelin airship L. 11, exploded in the air near Johannisthal, to-day. All the crew were killed, and 26 passengers out of 27. The party included the entire Admiralty Staff Board, headed by Commander Benisch. They were conducting the final trials prior to acceptance of the new craft for the navy. The Zeppelin was 400 feet above the Johannisthal highway when it fell in the roadway. A pillar of flame shot from the balloon, and in an instant the crash came. On September 8th last a similar air-craft, launched for the German navy, was destroyed in a hurricane, and 15 lives were lost. The L. 11 was the largest craft designed for the German navy, and was 500 feet long. The only survivor was Lieut. Baron von Siewl, who is in a dangerous condition. The bodies were mostly burned beyond recognition. Pioneers, armed with axes, hacked at the wreckage for two hours before they could extricate the last of the bodies of the victims. Six of the inmates of the centre gondola were blown through the sides of the car by the first explosion, and their bodies fell four hundred yards away from the wreck. The balloon was travelling at 40 miles an hour at the time of the crash.

LONDON, Oct. 17. Hope of rescuing any more men from the burning colliery is abandoned. The number entombed is now estimated at 376. Those with the ill brought up, four deaths supervening after the rescue, and two rescuers killed, made the death roll 426, a number unparalleled in this country.

It is unbelievable, isn't it? Why I thought they were wonderful creatures, so distinguished and beautiful that they seemed like another race of beings. Didn't you?

To drop sarcasm, isn't it rather amusing, this notion that we all hold in some degree that there is such a tremendous difference between society people and us humble middle-class folk; or, to take another angle on the question, between us respectable middle-class folks and those at the lower end of the scale?

Sometimes, in spite of myself, I will be snobbish enough to look down on some other human being; and again, I will be snobbish enough to crane my neck to look up to some wealthy acquaintance. — after all, there is no snobbery so complete as that of the men or women who by their self-abasement make condescension possible. And then like a flash of light there comes to me the realization that there is no such vast difference between human beings as we imagine.

If we had minds big enough to see things in the large, we should see how short the whole scale of difference is.

David Graham Phillips, in one of the most serious and thoughtful of the works toward which he was turning when the tragedy came, makes one of his characters say the following in regard to the variations and degrees of human capability: I think the same words would apply to all the variations between human beings: "There was a time (says the Successful man) when I despised incapables; then I pitied them; but latterly I have felt for them the sympathetic sense of brotherhood. Are we not all incapables? Differing only in degree, and how slightly then if we look at ourselves without vanity; like practice sketches put upon the slate by nature's learning hand and impatiently sponged away."

BOLOGNA, Italy, Oct. 17. William Marconi met another auto accident this morning, similar to that which cost him the loss of his eye some time ago. He was motoring with his wife when his car, controlled with a cart, while turning a corner. The shock broke all the glass of the auto, but happily no one was injured.

LONDON, Oct. 17. Sir George Wombwell, the last of the officers who took part in the Charge of the Light Brigade, in October, 1854, died to-day, at the age of 81. He had two horses killed under him during the famous Charge.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17. Francis Inch, the boyish looking Briton, who commanded the burned steamer Voltorno, came to this port last night, bringing with him 87 survivors of the passengers and crew of his ill-fated vessel. His story of the disaster in which 156 lives were lost had preceded him by wireless, but Inch told his tale in simply phrased, modestly spoken detail and described more vividly than wireless could picture the panorama of the Voltorno's loss, and the rescue of more than five hundred of those she had on board. Contrasted the way none on the Voltorno either among the officers or crew. Inch said there was no rush of seamen which made it necessary for him to warn them back with revolver, his only weapon if you will take a Cascaret now and then. All druggists sell Cascarets. ALBANY, Oct. 17. Governor Wm.
