A famous character of the old days, of the Blood reserve, came by its name, but here is the true story.

A famous character of the old days, of the Blood not the person, fitted out in Montana, in company with two other men, a train of supplies, including whiskey, and started north across the South Pelgan reserve in Montana to trade with the Canadian Indians.

It was illegal to carry whiskey into the Pelgan reserve, and a United States Marshal, getting wind of Johnson's trip, set out in pursuit with a troop of cavalry. They came up with Johnson on the reserve about 25 miles south of the international boundary and demanded his arrest.

Johnson and his party promptly refused to do any such thing. They stood-off the soldiers and came on over to Belly river, and named their fort "Stand-off."
