At the Forum yesterday afternoon Q.M. Sergt. T. A. P. Frost, in one of the whirlwind speeches for which he is so well known, arraigned the late government, and especially Samhuse, for the manner in which they have conducted the war. He described some of the officers as numbskulls, men who obtained their commissions through the political patronage committee, many of whom would not revert to a lieutenant's commission and go to France, but preferred to hang around England at the government's expense, while the country was going into debt to pay their salaries, which the solution of the prefure would have to to pay their salaries, which the soldiers on their return would have to pay. He was heckled at first, but held his ground and was always ready to pay their salaries, which the solwith a comeback.

Quartermaster-sergeant Frost said: "There is an organization today behind our national life that is always a power. It has no politics: I do not know whether you would call it nonpartizan, or all-partizan. It supports the party most that worships most at partizan, or all-partizan. It supports Ats shrine. Its agents grace our palaits shrine. Its agents grace our pala-tial hotels and pollute the lobbies and defile the members of parliament who are sent there to carry out the will

"It has grabbed our natural resources, merged our industries and placed under lock and key the product of forest and stream, factory and farm, and thus brought about the conquest of merce by act of parliament.

Pipe Line System "It has pipe lined all our products clean away from the source of production, so that you can buy cheaper at the spout than at the hopper. The most likely place to starve to death is on the steps of a canning factory in B.C. or an abattoir or elevator in Alberta."

The speaker said that when he first heard that conscription was coming into force he asked the question, "Can it be that there are only 400,000 loyal men in Canada?" Then he went on to say that he believed the main reason why the recruiting fell off was because the soldiers kept writing home to say that they were not having a square deal. They were promised that they would go to France as a unit and were afterwards split up. It might be perfectly proper to split up the battalions, but the men should not have been promised differently when the authorities here knew that it was not true. Western men were placed under the command of old fossilized undertakers from Ontario. No wonder that the men were sour. But many of these men who were sour while in England made good when they got to France.

Real Conscription

Real Conscription "Great Britain has conscripted her man power irrespective of caste or so-cial standing. She has conscripted alth and resources to such an exten that it has brought a kinship of interest between all classes of society in

"While mothers are praying for their oved ones in the trenches, others are preying on the children in their homes. "Any machine that turns millionaires and paupers out of the same hopper and paupers out of the same hopper uld be smashed and the owners riven life."

"Conscription is the expropriation of man's freedom to act in his own per-onal interests and his time and proor intention of giving him full remun-aration for his labor. It becomes law, and if he lives he can't make out his uct of labor given to the state with

"What about the holders of natural sources—nickel, lead, copper, iron, mber, railways—with their land? Thy is not the government saying that wants the wheat, the coal, and all roducts at the same price that it takes Why is not the government saying that ucts at the same price that it takes

Autobiography Of a Button'

The use and fashion of buttons increased to such an extent during the 14th century that in "The Romance of Sir Degrevant," the writer, describing the frock of an earl's daughter, said it would be too much bother to count the buttons on her dress.

During the 15th century our family was somewhat less in the limelight. Lace and points seem to have superseded us, but we recovered our ascendency during the next century and were worn in large numbers on the clothing of BOTH sexes.
