THE PASSING OF THE BIRDS. Murderous Millinery and Ignorant Pro-

ing Them Out. More than 30 years ago the ornithologists first began to fear the ultimate extinction of the birds of America. Their fears found words, but their warnings were laughed at because no one could be brought to believe that prolific creatures, harmless by nature, could be in danger of total destruction. It is known now that the extermination which was feared 30 years ago is soon to be an accomplished fact unless means are taken at once to check the slaughter of our useful birds for purposes of personal adornment.

There are at least 50 species of feathered life once common in all parts of the United States east of the Mississippi River that are now seen only rarely. The birds that are being exterminated most rapidly are those whose brilliant markings make them a prey to the millinery trade, which has men employed everywhere to kill the innocents. The number of birds annually sacrificed to the vanity of the women of America is placed as high as 8,000,000 by the testimony of those who have investigated the matter.

sale milliners choose nesting time as their most profitable season. Then the adult birds are easily found and rapidly approached. It is far from exaggeration to say that one bird out of every four worn a bit of feathered fine. a bit of feathered finery represents a nestful of fledgelings doomed to slow starvation by the death of the parent.

A few years ago the wooded banks of Lake Michigan north of Chicago were the breeding grounds of hundreds of scarlet tanagers, possibly the most beautiful bird known to American ornithology. Now they are so rare that one must search a whole summer day to find a single specimen. The red-winged blackbird is fast once made its nest at the end of the drooping boughs of the elms in the very heart of large eastern cities, now is seen rarely save in remote country districts, and there it is now as shy as it once was friendly The numerous family known as the warblers, whose diminutive size would be a protection did not their surpassing beauty make them objects of cupidity, are going the way of the others. Many varieties of this family nest north of the latitude of Chicago, but great numbers of the little creatures are killed during the vernal migration. The woodpeckers are rapidly decreasing in numbers. The red-headed woodpecker, whose poll was dyed by Hiawatha for timely service, was once a common resident of Chicago. It is seen still occasionally in Kenwood and other southern city districts, but the hunter for the millinery market and the small boy with his noiseless air gun are fast depleting its

The slaughter of the birds is far more than a mere matter of sentiment. It is a question of importance from an economic point of view. Nearly all the birds of bright plumage are insectivorous. A statement of the number of noxious insects that a single songster will kill in a day would tax the credulity could it not readily be proven.

There are about 800 varieties of American birds, and of this number those whose conduct forms no excuse for their living can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Husbandmen have been apt to let a cherry bruised by the beak of a robin outweigh the death by the same beak of 100 insects whose killing made the ripe cherries possible. The tiny bird named by ortnithologists the creeper is called the sap-sucker by farmers because of its supposed habits. So far from sapping the life of a tree this misunderstood little bird picks from beneath the bark the insect that has been slowly working the tree's destruction. If the farmers will consult their own interests and protect bird life they will reap the benefit with the wheat and pluck it with their cherries. The continuance of the birds with us rests, however, mainly with woman. If she will permanently substitute ribbons and flowers for feathers as articles of bonnet decoration the trill of the song sparrow and the liquid note of the hermit thrush may be heard in our meadows and woods for the years to come.

Ricked the Wrong Man. A young Poughkeepsian a few days since picked up a friend on Market street and took him home to lunch without notice to the former's wife. She called him one side and explained that there were only a dozen raw oysters, and when their friend had eaten his quota of four he must not be asked to take more. All this the husband promised to remember. When their guest had eaten his four oysters the host asked him to take some more. The wife looked distressed and the guest declined. The husband insisted that his friend should have more. The wife looked as if she were in great agony and the guest firmly refused to allow the rest of the oysters to be brought from the kitchen. Later the wife said to the husband: "How could you urge him to have more oysters when I explained to you that there weren't any more?" "I am very sorry," said the penitent husband, "but I forgot all about it." "What do you suppose I was kicking you under the table for?" retorted the wife. Butyou didn't kick me." said the husband, Poughkeepsie News Press.

MOST TERRIFYING OF ALL. Hairbreadth Escapes of Lite and Limb

Are Nothing Compared to It. We were discussing moments of supreme terror, says a writer in Truth, and each of us had given his most thrilling experience, when his heart had come the nearest to standing still—getting off its beat, as it were—and it had got to be Cooper's turn. Almy had told of the time he fell over the precipice, and was only saved from being dashed to pieces by clutching a dandelion which grew on the brink, and Bowen had related how he drank from a bottle, the gift of a New Jersey friend, in the dark, and for a moment thought that he had taken nitric acid through mistake. Acer had given a graphic description of the cold chills which had run over him and the sudden awful faintness when he went out to dinner in full dress and discovered as he entered the diningroom that it was only 5:29; and I had lived over for their benefit my experience of jumping from a locomotive just as it crashed into the side of a swiftly-moving

Cooper had sat silently smoking until the last, and after his turn had come he remained for some time apparently deep in thought. At length he said: "Gentlemen, I have no doubt that each of you has given, thoughtlessly, perhaps, what he considers his supreme moment of terror; but, knowing all of you as I do, the joys of your home lives and the trials of the head of a family, you will pardon me if I say that I think that you have made a mistake. Is it possible that none of you have ever been aroused at 2 o'clock in the morning by your wife's solemn statement that there were burglars in the house, and that while you were groping your way nervously across the room through the horrible darkness to light the gas, you have none of you ever set your bare foot suddenly on the baby's little hollow rubber doll, which whistled when compressed?"

For a moment there was solemn silence, and then we guilty wretches, bound to gether by the common tie of fatherhood, arose, shook hands sympathetically with each other, and took Cooper out and bought him something.
