Politics in the Northwest.

The Alberta Conservatives have held a convention, adopted a platform, and decided to bring out party candidates. The Liberals, a short time ago, took the same action. Henceforth, then party lines will be as closely drawn in the new provinces as in the old.

Theoretically, this seems absurd. The questions that divide parties in Dominion affairs have no place in the government of a province. In the limited sphere of relations of these latter bedies the main concern is the honest, economical administration of local afvention at Chicago discussed fairs. Grit or Tory could do that equally well-if equally honest and capable. And, in theory, there is no reason why both Grits and Tories should not unite in the government.

But theory is not always practicable. When the leading men of a province are opposing each other with all their strength in Dominion politics, it is no nony in provincial politics. There is a spirit of antagonism which naturally eeps them apart. Each becomes suspicious of the other; each prefers to work in local affairs with those who are his associates in national affairs. While we might prefer to see all parties united in the management of provincial concerns, we need not be surprised if it is found to be impractic-

Where, Oh Where?

[J. A. Blair.] Where are the millions of our race That lived in ages past? Where is their mystic dwelling-place Since earth received their dust?

Where are the artful plans they laid To pilfer empty fame?
Where are the sordid tricks they played
To reap dishonest gain?

Where is the wealth they so much prized In houses, gold and lands?
Where are the heaps like ants they raised?
Dissolved like shifting sands.

Where are the swarthy, savage hordes That swarmed o'er mount and plain? Where did they keep their dim records, To tell from whence they came? Where is Xerxes' seething mass, ere are the tears he shed, alas! At Death's victorious reign? Where are the cohorts Caesar led? Where are his vassal kings? Where is the camp that manna fed

On Syria's barren plains? Where the invincible armadas That frown'd on sea and land? Where are the jealous crusaders-Fanatics sword in hand?

Where are they all? All pass'd away To earth, from whence they came. Where is their wealth? Turn'd to decay Scarce left a trace behind.

Death casts all down like autumn leaves Before the sweeping blast; Earth garners in the fallen sheaves, And stores them in her breast.

IN CASKET WITH SNAKES

Supposed Wife of Hypnotist Rescued at Society Women's Instance.

Springfield, August 22. - Professor Seidenberg, of New York, was arrested on complaint of several society women of the city, headed by Mrs. E. Kelly, a millionaire's wife, on the charge of keeping his supposed wife under hypnotic power in a casket of reptiles against her will.

Mrs. Florence Baldwin, upon visiting Spring Grove Park, learned that this woman exclaimed before she was put under the spell last Monday: "Oh, if I had some one to help me." She is afraid of snakes, but notwithstanding this she is compelled by the professor to lie in the casket all the week, covered with crawling snakes.

The protest signed by the society women obtained by Mrs. Baldwin urged the police to aid the humane society to arrest Professor Siedenberg under a health regulation, urging that the woman's health was being ruined by being subjected to such a test, and that the reptiles were filthy.

The police and Dr. D. W. Spence, of the humane society arrested Professor Siedenberg, and the woman was given in charge of Mrs. Baldwin. She will be kept from the professor until she comes out from the hypnotic spell and can speak for herself.
