The Wandering of Bambino Which Almost Cost the Humorist $5.

New York, April 8. - Mark Twain was busy yesterday at his home, 21 Fifth avenue, reading the riot act to Bambino, his erring cat. Bambino had an attack of wanderlust on Friday, and fled from home. Mr. Clemens gave him up for lost on Saturday and sent an advertisement to the newspapers offering $5 reward for the return of an "intensely black cat with thick, velvety

Early Saturday evening Mr. Clemens' secretary, Miss Lyon, met Bambino on University Place and haled him home. The humorist slapped Bambino on the wrist and gave him a handsome supper. Then Mr. Clemens withdrew the advertisement, fearing a rush of black, velvety cats from the common people. Bambino came to Mr. Clemens from his daughter and he is very fond of the cat. Bambino sleeps on his bed every night, and his eyes, the largest greenest extant, furnish a faint light for the chamber. He never went out of the house until Friday, and he has promised Mr. Clemens not to do it again. He had nothing to say last night about his adventures, nor would Mark Twain reveal them.

The correspondent of the Toronte News in Halifax, N. S., says that the transfer of the English troops from that city and the garrisoning of the fortress by Canadian troops, about July 1, will not be as easy as it appears to the general public throughout the Dominion. He says: "The difficulty is in getting Canadians to join the colors. To the average young man the humdrum life of the soldiers in garrison has little attraction. In time of war Canadians will readily respond to the call, but not so when there is no chance of a fight. It is said here that it would be extremely difficult to get men enough to form one good regiment, not alone enough to garrison Halifax and Esquimalt. The Royal Canadian Regiment which was in garrison here during the South African war was hardly ever kept at its complement and the discipline maintained was not such as to excite admiration. And yet these men had as an incentive the hope that they might see active service. In short military men say that the Canadian is not a good professional soldier, he does not take kindly to strict discipline.
