THE DEFENCE HAVE THEIR INNINGS AT THE HYAMS TRIAL.

GRAVE ERROR MADE BY DR. TESKEY

He Falls into a Neat Trap Laid by Mr. Osler.

The Defence Open Their Case With Their Medical Testimony—Their Theory as to the Cause of the Injuries to the Head of Willie Wells—Dr. Teskey Says One Crushing Blow Could do It All—The Johnston Theory Illustrated and Affirmed by the Witness—Mr. Osler's Brilliant Cross-Examination.

The evidence for the prosecution in the Hyams murder trial has at last been placed before the jury. It was a brilliant cross-examination when court adjourned last evening, the defence was fairly begun. The only incident worthy of note in the closing of the Crown's case was the production of the evidence of death to the New York Life by the friends of young Wells. One of the demands in all cases shall be accompanied by a sworn statement by an uninterested householder, who is acquainted with the facts connected with the death of the subject of the policy. In this statement by H. T. Hyams he swears that he was not interested in the policy. The jury will be asked by the Crown to reconcile, if possible, this deposition with the fact admitted by the defence that before Harry Hyams married Martha Wells in May, he had obtained $8700 of the money paid on the policy in which he was not interested.

The Hands of Mr. Osler.
The theory of how the injuries to the skull of Willie Wells could be caused by one blow accidentally administered, as set up by Dr. Teskey, is being restated by the defence in a very plausible and withal very beautiful, while Dr. Teskey was the tender handling of Mr. Johnston, but at the end of brilliant cross-examination by the great Queen's Counsel, the many bare possibilities could not stand up to the scrutiny which it depended for existence were fully exposed, and its glaring inconsistencies were obstinately brought out in such a light as to evoke the laughter of the whole court.
