

- there were significant barriers to accessing the U.S. market such as trade regulations, product standards and quotas;
- the products belonging to the specific manufacturing sector were too diverse in nature to conduct an effective survey with the level of resources available;
- at this time, other considerations such as trade sensitivities limit the opportunities for export in specific manufacturing sectors.