

most valuable addition to the literature on the subject discussed, and more than that, it is a summing up of all previous literature thereon. It is said that no history of events can be accurate until time puts them into their true perspective, and so it may be said that the volume before us is the first chapter in the history of the Constitution of this Canada of ours, whatever its future destiny may be. It gives the history of its past and suggests what future chapters may probably tell to those who come after us."

—Canada Law Journal, November 1st, 1913.

"The classical commentaries on the Act are still Wheeler, Confederation Law, and Lefroy, Legislative Power in Canada, but both works are practically fifteen years old."

—Keith's Responsible Government in the Dominions (1912), Vol. 2, p. 665.

"Mr. Lefroy has for some years been favourably known as the author of 'The Law of Legislative Power of Canada,' and he has now greatly amplified that work, and indeed entirely re-written it, while retaining its principal features. His new book is likely to remain for long an authoritative and comprehensive treatise in which the Federalism of Canada can be studied, not only in its general principles, but also as a practical system, tested and elucidated by the conflicts and decisions of the Courts. As Federalism is very much in the air at the present time, and likely for some time to be a principal topic of discussion . . . Mr. Lefroy's work is sane, learned, and scholarly, and should be possessed by all who desire a complete and trustworthy book of reference on the Canadian Constitution. He would add greatly to its value for the general student if he could incorporate in a new edition a brief summary, shewing the political events with which many of the cases quoted are closely connected."

—Saturday Review, June 13th 1914.
(Vol. 117, p. 773.)

For sale by the publishers, bound in half-calf at $10.

The Carswell Company, Limited
LAW PUBLISHERS, Etc.
19 Duncan Street Toronto, Ontario