SENTRY'S SHOTS PROVED FATAL.

Lieut. Reginald Scott of the Royal Navy, shot at 22nd Regiment, Has Died.

Victoria, B.C. April 12.—Lieut. Reginald Scott of the Royal Navy, who was shot by a sentry, whose challenge he failed to answer, when visiting the Esquimaux naval yard, died of his wounds last evening. Father Reginald of Cowichan, who has labored among the Indians of this province for 42 years, died today at the Jubilee Hospital. He was 75 years old.

The Demon Druggist—in olden times it was a popular belief that demons moved invisibly through the air seeking to enter into men and trouble them. At the present day the demon, druggist, is at large in the same way, seeking habitation in these who by careless or unwise living invite him. And once he enters a man it is difficult to dislodge him. He just finds himself so possessed should know that a valiant friend to do battle for him with the unseen foe is Partridge's Vegetable Pills, which are ever ready for the trial.

Woman's World

By Katherine Leslie.

O, the poor boys! What have they done?

From the "Chicago Herald," a woman called Lillian Bell. This lady has written a book—ah, these modern books!—with the title "From a Girl's Point of View," in which, did she but know it, there is a deal of excellent self-counsel. Here there is "the crude, untrained, epistolary man under 35," and she waxes eloquent and—let us put it gently—foolish thereupon, blissfully forgetting that in this world of men and women it is a case always of six of one and half a dozen of the other. "The eyes of the untrained man under 35 are never taken off himself," says the fair Lillian. "They are turned in."

The concept of one of these men is the most colossal specimen of psychological architecture in existence. Far be it from me to say that the untrained man under 35, at his worst, is of no use in the world. He is excellent for a two-step. I have used a number of them quite successfully in this way. "This fair Chicago Lilly is evidently quite unaware of her own monumental conceit, for she goes on to say, 'And yet, I suppose, untrained men under 35 have their use in the world aside from the part they play in the discipline of discriminating young women. Girls even marry these men. Lovely girls, too. Clever girls—girls who have a hundred times more than their husbands, and who are a hundred times fairer grained. I wonder if they love them, if they are satisfied with them, if even of soul is not a bitter thing to bear. An always wondering why girls marry them.' " "Conversation," again says the self-complacent lady, "with the untrained man under 35 is equally impossible, because he never converses, he merely talks. And your listener is entirely thrown away upon him, because a mere talker never cares whether you listen or not, so long as he does not interrupt him. It is the trained man over 35 who converses and who can be trusted to respond. A man under 35 is in this world to be made happy. The man over 35 tries to make you happy."

This pretty, opinionated lady—for she is both—has very evidently never serious and pondered the advice about considering the beam in one's own eye before examining the mote in the eye of one's brother—under 35. But there is a joke attached to the story, a joke that should make amends to the untrained man under 35, who Miss Bell has so awfully criticized. They do say, too, whether it is true or not I cannot say, that since the publication of Miss Bell's book, her engagements to a young man under 35 have been announced! The woman who lives up to her opinions is as rare as a white crow, and the calmness with which she will turn her back upon those opinions is as refreshing as it is feminine.

Said a sweet woman with unwonted, the rightness of indignation, the other day, when she had heard a harrowing story of the concealed poverty and illness of a hitherto well-to-do family, whose pride would not allow a hint of their condition to get abroad, "It is a very great blot on our Christianity that, when thru some unforeseen event we fall upon evil days, we are afraid—we dare not go to any of our friends for assistance—in fact, we would prefer to seek, when in such a position, to suffer, to suffer, to suffer, rather than allow any of our little world to know that misfortune, which, like the rain, falls upon the just and the unjust, has come upon us. We accept people's hospitality and extend it to others when we or they are not in need of it, but the moment the time arrives when we are actually in need of bread we cannot bring ourselves to allow even those who know best to learn that we are in extremity. And why? Because we do not trust each other—there is no real brotherhood between us—we do not feel that it is our duty to stand shoulder to shoulder as Christians should. We know that if we let someone into the secret he or she will help us willingly enough, perhaps, but the person is rare indeed who will help and keep silent about it; the story will be told, the confidence of the story will be betrayed, and somebody else will tell the story of our distress and poverty to somebody else—of course, also in confidence—and presently all our little world is agog with it."

The little woman warmly, "we professing Christians, that the One who urged us to be kind and helpful, the one to the other, also laid it upon our left hand should not know what our right hand does when it comes to a question of helping the needy. I am not here speaking of cases of chronic poverty, for here, alas! there is often too little but of those dreadful cases of sudden and temporary misfortune which come all unforeseen upon the well-to-do, who have hosts of so-called friends, but who would rather than let them know their distress, cannot trust them with the story of our sudden downfall because, deny it as we like, poverty is regarded as worse than a crime, and those suffering it are avoided and politely ostracized. We are church members, but the church is the last of all our friends to which we would flee. It would help us, of course, but its methods are, perhaps of necessity, such that our case would be discussed by two or three or perhaps several persons, and where there are two or three there is always the one who chatters, harmlessly, perhaps, but still chatters. Of course, it is all very witty and concealing so hand in hand with bitter distress. It was a bit arrangement, but there was a deal of truth in what the little woman said.

April.

Her name is Waywardness; she yields to easy laughter, mirth and merriment. Her faithful love, the woods, the fields, the forest before her, while the strong Young Sun-God's kiss her hair drops gleam. She frowns. Ah! then the fields, the wood are shadowed in her hair drops gleam. Lie subject to her wifely mood, And laugh and smile, her hair drops gleam. When, lo! the Wanton reconciles. Her swains with swiftly sudden smiles.

—Frank Saville.

The superstition connecting the rabbit with Easter eggs has its origin in an old German fairy tale. Children in Germany and Holland firmly believe that rabbits hatch eggs at Easter time for their special benefit, and many parents hide eggs in rabbits' nests, that the children may find them. This is the reason why so many of the Easter toys and candies represent "Bunny Rabbits" seated on a nest of eggs.

The following is a recipe for making violet sachet powder: Get at the chemist's these ingredients in powder: 8 ounces of coriander root, 4 ounces of black currant leaves, 4 ounces of cassia buds, 4 ounces of rose leaves, 3/4 of a dram of grain musk, 2 ounces of gum benzoin, 3/4 of a dram of essential oil of almonds. Mix well and put into small muslin bags, which sew up. Cover these with pretty shades of silk. The quantities given will suffice for a dozen bags.

FOR THE HORSE SHOW.

Entries Coming in Fast—A Splendid Display of Horses is Now Assured.

Entries for the Horse Show, to be held on April 26, 27 and 28, were received in large numbers yesterday, and the list promises to be greater in quantity and quality than any previous year. Owing to the Good Friday holiday, entries have been extended until Saturday. Among the prominent show men who will be represented at the show are Senator Cochrane, Hillhurst, Que.; Robert Both, M.P., Bowmanville; Adam Beck, M.P., London; William Hendrie, Hamilton; Robert Graham, Charnwood; H. N. Crossley, Rosebank; R. Ness, Howick; Que.; J. T. Dietrich, Galt, and many others from a distance. Mr. Adam Beck, in the hunters and jumpers, has a particularly fine lot of entries, as he has not sold a horse in two years, and will show all his prize winners, and which have won the blue ribbon at the New York Horse Show last autumn, and the year before. From the city such well-known owners as George W. Beardsmore, M.P., John Macdonald, Walter H. Smith, R. Bond, J. Ross Robertson, J. Maher, G. A. Case and G. Pepper will be largely represented. Mr. Pepper has schooled some hunters to jump at dizzy heights. The high jump will be a very attractive feature. The ladies are taking a great deal of interest in the show, and both the ladies' riding class, in which they will show the horses over the jumps, and the middle classes will be most interesting.

Their Excellencies the Governor-General and Countess of Minto will be present, and there will also be many other distinguished visitors. The physical drill and march past of the military will be an additional feature, while a number of charming women will dispense tea and refreshments in the interest of the Red Cross Society at the Horse Show. The sale of horses takes place on Wednesday next at the Bon Marche, 7 West King-street, at 12 o'clock noon.
