You may have noticed that a good many men who attend church are not troubled with insomnia. The average girl is apt to penetrate a desire to kiss her little brother when the right young man is present.

The women smiled wearily. "No, I can't say that she is," she replied. "But I must say that I am learning German rapidly."

A few days later a friend of the young housewife stopped in to see her.

"Is your new girl getting so that she can understand English?" asked the friend.

The woman smiled wearily. "No, I can't say that she is," she replied. "But I must say that I am learning German rapidly."

Fashion Hints for Times Readers

MATCHING HAT AND BLOUSE FOR MATINEE WEAR

With her smart little coat and skirt suit the matinee girl wears a very dainty blouse, and to match it, a hat that will be appropriate for tea room wear after the theatre. This dark blue chiffon marquis blouse is matched by a big turban of blue velvet, brightened by a line of Persian satin at the edge of the brim, and trimmed at the back with a blue-green bird with iridescent plumage. Hats are removed in the theatre of course, but at the tea room afterward the dainty blouse and hat make a charming combination.

It does to me.

And here's another. When you are in doubt as to which of two things is proper to do, do the kinder and it's ten to one you will be doing the right one.

I know a little country girl, who, when she dined for the first time at a stylish city home, was very much puzzled as to whether she ought to say "Thank you" when the maid brought the serving of soup around to her place. She decided that it would seem contrived to do so, and received her plate in silence.

She says she will never forget the flush of shame that swept over her when the mistress of the house thanked the maid as she received her plate.

If the little girl had done the kinder thing she would have done the right thing, and she says she will never again depart from that exterior.

Spreading of that incident reminds me, by the way, of a home which I visit where it is the invariable custom for the master of the house no matter what guests are present, to serve the mistress of the house first. In this way she sets the example when there is any doubtful point of table etiquette so that all her guests need to do is to watch her. Isn't that an exquisite bit of thoughtfulness. To me it seems a custom that ought to be adopted everywhere.

That there can be no really good manners, without goodness of heart and that true courtesy consists not in forms alone, but in forms made living by the spirit of good will, are facts that we have much to learn in our admiration of fashion and wealth, but they are sterling facts just the same.

Let me commend to the young person who wants to be well bred Lord Chesterfield's most excellent definition of good breeding:

"Good breeding is a combination of much sense, some good nature, and a little self-denial for the sake of others, with a view to obtain the same indulgence from them."
