Lady Edna stood aghast at the mental picture of the magnificent little marquis being asked to have a "touch" in the coat closet of the Imperial.

The lady in green gave Algy's restored countenance a final pat with a piece of chamois, and sat back to observe the effect. Barring a slight swelling here and there, he seemed under the electric light at least, almost his fresh, pink little self.

"It's a blessing the train's on time," she remarked to Lady Edna. "Daylight would give the whole snap away."

"For heaven's sake, behave yourself, Algy!" said Lady Edna impatiently. "All this trouble is on your account! I'm ashamed of you!"
Nellie suddenly put the pitcher on the bureau, and darting to Lord Algy's side put an arm around him and faced Lady Edna with stormy eyes.

"He isn't a little boy to be lectured before everybody," She remonstrated.
"He's no worse than the others!
Wake up, dear," she continued to Algy. "You promised me you'd brace up."

"Bless my soul!" ejaculated Lady Edna to herself. 'What am I assisting at?" Meanwhile the lady in green, with that demure dimple in either cheek, assiduously painted Lord Algy's bruises.

Strong black coffee brought the three gamboliers a little nearer to the ealization of their situation—thereby only increasing the difficulty of handing them, thought Lady Edna, when the heard their ideas begin to come

"Dear ol' guv'nor!" gurgled the boylish lordling. "I'll just embrace the old boy and cry down his neck. I say!

"That's all right," said Algy, obstinately sentimental. "I'm the child of his old age. I'm Benjamin. I shall cast myself on his bosom and say, 'Jacob behold thy son!"

"I t'ought you said the ol' boy had trouble with the Jews," remarked

"Not the Jews in the Bible, you ase," returned Lord Algy, with scorn.

quis to understand that the party had come direct to the station from a late affair at the barracks, which seemed perfectly natural to His Lordship. Her greatest anxiety was that she might not be able to keep him out of town until after the police court ordeal later in the day; but upon her representations that it had been impossible to secure fit accomodations in Blackfoot, he agreed it would be wiser to go on up the line to the railroad hotel at Cairngorm Hot Springs where Lady Edna and Lord Algy could join him in the afternoon. She breathed again.

The train waits ten minutes in Blackfoot. In the bustle attendant upon rechecking His Lordship's trunks Lady Edna managed to avoid the necessity for general introductions. The lady in green had her hands full keeping the exuberant Fabien in the background, but Nellie was quite prominently in the Marquis's eye; and he seemed to be impressed with her air of quite watchfulness over Algy. He intimated to his sister that a marriage with a good, worthy personal at every appearance. The picture show running is an all-Pathe programme of late successes, the light comedy, "The Mischief of the Girls' Boarding School," being something delicious, new and pretty, colored throughout. "Bad form!" commented the Honorable Bill severely. "As an Englishman and a gentleman you just want to grip his hand and say, 'Howdo, guv'remarked Lord Algy calmly. "Ain't it, nor! Tiptop night ain't it."

"Ain't ' is rotten bad grammar," Aunt Edna?"

"Ang it all, he's a sport!" cried

Algy. He intimated to his sister that a marriage with a good, worthy person of the country might be the saving of the young scamp, and suggested that, since the young woman was a friend of Lady Edna's, she might be invited to join them at the Springs.
His sister shuddered. Indeed, she thought ten minutes was quite long enough for a stay in Blackfoot for the Marquis; it was growing lighter every minute and the gamboliers were gettaken before last Saturday's matinee will be shown today. All children who were present Saturday have a chance

"That's all right," said Algy, obstinately sentimental. "I'm the child of his old age. I'm Benjamin. I shall control words. I was grown and say. I shall control was grown and shall control was grown and shall control. It was with a great sigh of relief that she saw the train start at last and pull out with the Marquis on the rear platform, including them all in his smile of condescending approval.

"My family owes you a great deal for what you've done tonight," began the Countess after an awkward pause; "and I—I don't know whom to thank."

The lady in green looked at her in surprise. "I thought you knew who I was," she said.

As Lady Edna looked at her one of her eardrops flashed a soft, pinky reflection from the electric light at the corner; with that tiny gleam Lady Edna remembered bits of Blackfoot tea-table gossip and understood at last.

"They call you the—the Pink Pearl?" she murmured interrogatively.
