A MEMORY.

There is a dale, a peaceful dale,
Where shadows fall of lofty trees,
Where naurous thro' the mountains will
Like spirita' whisper on the breeze.
And nest a flowing river pours
His silver waters to the sea!
Whilst high above the sweet bird soars,
Cutting the soft air elently.

And there when dark ning eve had thrown Her shadows o'er the deep blue sky, I've often sat and thought alone. Recelling happy days gone by; And often visions would rise.

Woven in Fancy's fairy loom, And conjure up before mine eyes. Fond pictures of bright days to come

Oh, peaceful dale: Oh, blessed dale?
In dreams I may return to thee

Oh, peaceful dale: Oh, bleased dale?
In dreams I may return to thee,
And here again thy normurs wail,
And soothe me with their melody,
And when my evening may at last
Be changing into solemn night,
Such be my memories of the past,
My visions of the coming light,
