COURIER EMBROIDERY PATTERNS

DIRECTIONS FOR TRANSFERRING.

Lay a piece of impression paper, face down, upon the material. Place the newspaper pattern in position over this, and with a hard, sharp pencil firmly trace each line.

If the material is sheer, this may be laid over the pattern, and the design drawn direct on the goods, as it will show through. When handled in this way, impression paper, of course, will not be required.

The scallops are padded and closely buttonholed. The neck is also finished with a close buttonhole stitch. The flowers and leaves are worked solid, with the dots as eyelets and the stems in the outline stitch. Use mercerized cotton No. 25.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush This Through Faded, Lifeless Locks and They Become Dark, Glossy, Youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been treated. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance. Agent, T. George Bowles.

HOW TO CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

The Common Cause is Lack of Blood—Therefore You Must Build Up the Blood

There is the most intimate relation between the condition of the blood and the activity of the stomach. The blood depends upon the stomach for a large part of its nourishment, while every act of digestion, from the time the food enters the stomach and is assimilated by the blood needs plenty of pure well-oxygenated blood. The muscles, glands and nerves of the stomach work only according to the quality of the blood.

The most common cause of indigestion is lack of rich, red blood. Not only does impure blood weaken the muscles of the stomach, but it lessens the product of the glands of the intestines and stomach, which furnish the digestive fluids. Nothing will more promptly cure indigestion than plenty of pure blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the safest and most certain blood-builder. A thorough trial of these pills gives a hearty appetite, perfect digestion, strength and health. Here is proof of the value of these Pills in cases of indigestion. Mrs. Alfred Austin, Varna, Ont., says: "My system became run-down and my stomach very weak. I had no desire for food and what I did take caused me great distress, and I did not afford me nourishment, and I was gradually growing weaker, and could scarcely do any work at all. I did not sleep soundly at night and would wake up not at all refreshed and with a feeling of dread. Some years previously I had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with much benefit and this decided me to again try them. My confidence was not misplaced, as by the time I had used six boxes I was again feeling quite well."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by sending to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Fall from Bus Top. An act of generosity cost a Doncaster joiner named Dimelin his life. He was riding on the top of an omnibus from Doncaster to Tickhill when his hat blew off.

A boy picked it up for him, and the man, in leaning over the side of the omnibus to give the boy coin, fell headlong on to his head, a tin box on which he had been sitting falling after him. # THE RETURN OF TARZAN

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

Copyright 1913 by W. G. Chapman.

Hazel Strong? What memories the name inspired! It had been a letter to this girl, penned by the fair hand of Jane Porter, that had carried to him the first message from the woman he loved. How vividly he recalled the little boat squatted outside her window, watching her every move. And this was Hazel Strong, Jane Porter's best friend!

Let us go back a few months to the little, wind swept platform of a railway station in northern Wisconsin. The smoke of forest fires blazed over the surrounding landscape, its arid fumes smarting the eyes of a little party of six who stood waiting the coming of the train that is to bear them away toward the south.

Professor Archimedes Q. Porter, his hands clasped beneath the tails of his long coat, gazed back and forth under the ever watchful eye of his faithful secretary, Samuel T. Philander. Twice within the past few minutes he has started absentmindedly across the tracks in the direction of a nearby swamp, only to be rescued and dragged back by the tireless Mr. Philander.

Jane Porter, the professor's daughter, is in strained and lifeless conversation with William Cecil Clayton and Tarzan of the Apes. Within the little waiting room but a bare moment before a confession of love and renunciation had taken place that blighted the lives and happiness of two of the party, but William Cecil Clayton (Lord Greystoke) was not one of them.

Behind Miss Porter hovered the motherly Esmeralda. She, too, was happy, for was she not returning to her beloved Maryland? Already she could see dimly through the fog of smoke the murky headlight of the oncoming engine. The men began to gather up the hand baggage. Suddenly Clayton exclaimed:

"By Jove!" he cried. "I've left my ulster in the waiting room," and hastened to fetch it.

"Goodbye, Jane," said Tarzan, extending his hand. "God bless you!" "Goodbye," replied the girl faintly. "Try to forget me. No, not that. I could not bear to think that you had forgotten me."

"There is no danger of that, dear," he answered. "I wish to heaven that I could see dimly through the fog of smoke the murky headlight of the oncoming engine. The men began to gather up the hand baggage. Suddenly Clayton exclaimed:

CHAPTER XIII. Ships That Pass. CLAYTON staggered as though he had received a mortal blow. Just then he heard the others calling to him to hurry—the train was coming to a stop at the little platform. Like a man dazed he gathered up his ulster. He would tell them about the cablegram when they were all on the train. Then he ran out upon the platform just as the engine whistled twice in the final warning that precedes the first rumbling jerk of coupling pins. The others were on board, leaning out from the platform of a Pullman, crying to him to hurry. Quite five minutes elapsed before they were settled in their seats, nor was it until then that Clayton discovered that Tarzan was not with them.

"Where is Tarzan?" he asked Jane Porter. "In another car?" "No," she replied; "at the last minute he determined to drive his machine back to New York. He is anxious to see more of America than is possible from a cablegram. He is returning to France, you know."

Clayton did not reply. He was trying to find the right words to explain to Jane Porter the calamity that had befallen him—and her. He wondered just what the effect of this knowledge would be on her. Would she still wish to marry him—to be plain Mrs. Clayton? Suddenly the awful sacrifice which one of them must make loomed large before his imagination. Then came the question, Will Tarzan claim his own? The ape-man had known the contents of the message before he calmly had admitted that Kala, the ape, was his mother. Could it have been for love of Jane Porter?

Was it not reasonable to assume that he meant never to claim his birthright? If this were so, what right had he, William Cecil Clayton, to thwart the wishes, to balk the self sacrifice of the strange man? If Tarzan of the Apes could do this thing to save Jane Porter from unhappiness, why should he, to whose care she was intrusting her whole future, do ought to jeopardize her interests?

And so he reasoned until the first generous impulse to proclaim the truth and relinquish his title and his estates to their rightful owner was forgotten beneath the mass of sophistries which self interest had advanced. But during the balance of the trip and for many days thereafter he was moody and distraught. Occasionally the thought obtruded itself that possibly at some later day Tarzan would regret his magnanimity and claim his rights.

Several days after they reached Baltimore Clayton broached the subject of an early marriage to Jane. "What do you mean by early?" she asked.

"Within the next few days. I must return to England at once—I want you to return with me, dear."

"I can't get ready so soon as that," replied Jane. "It will take a whole month at least."

She was glad, for she hoped that whatever called him to England might still further delay the wedding. She had made a bad bargain, but she intended carrying her part loyally to the bitter end if she could manage to secure a temporary reprieve, though she felt that she was warranted in doing so.

"Very well, Jane," he said. "I am disappointed, but I shall let my trip to England wait a month. Then we can go back together."

But when the month was drawing to a close she found still another excuse upon which to hang a postponement, until at last, discouraged and doubting, Clayton was forced to go back to England alone.

The several letters that passed between them brought Clayton no nearer to a consummation of his hopes than he had been before, and so it was that he wrote directly to Professor Porter and enlisted his services. The old man had always favored the match. He liked Clayton, and, being of an old southern family, he put rather an exaggerated value on the advantages of a title, which meant little or nothing to his daughter.

Clayton agreed that the professor accept his invitation to be his guest in London, an invitation which included the professor's entire little family—Mr. Philander, Esmeralda and all. The Englishman argued that once Jane was there and home ties had been broken she would not so dread the step which she had so long hesitated to take. So the evening that he received Clayton's letter Professor Porter announced that they would leave for London the following week.

But once in London Jane Porter was no more tractable than she had been in Baltimore. She found one excuse after another for why she was to stay. Tennington invited the party to cruise around Africa in his yacht she expressed the greatest delight in the idea, but absolutely refused to be married until they had returned to London. As the trip was to consume a year at least, for they were to stop for indefinite periods at various points of interest, Clayton mentally anatomized Tennington for ever suggesting such a ridiculous trip.

It was Lord Tennington's plan to cruise through the Mediterranean and the Red sea, and for the purpose of heading down the east coast, putting in at every port that was worth the seeing. And so it happened that on a certain day two vessels passed in the strait of Gibraltar. The smaller, a trim white yacht, was speeding toward the east, and on her deck sat a young woman who gazed with awe and eyes upon a diamond studded tocket which she idly fingered. Her thoughts were far away in the dim, leafy fastness of a tropical jungle, and her heart was with her thoughts.

She wondered if the man who had given her the beautiful bauble, that had meant so much more to him than the intrinsic value which he had not even known could ever have meant to him, was back in his savage forest.

And upon the deck of the larger vessel, a passenger steamer, also passing toward the east, the man sat with another young woman, and the two idly speculated upon the identity of the dainty craft gliding so gracefully through the gentle swell of the lazy sea.
