HEROISM OF THE LIGHT-KEEPER'S DAUGHTER.

(Written for the Reporter.)

The keeper and his daughter lived alone, in their home, on the shore of the lake. There was nothing to cheer the spot, not even a single tree.

The old man's task was to light the lamps and keep them clear and bright. To vary his dull and lonely life, he would sometimes go to the shore of the lake and look at the stars.

His daughter, a handsome, brown-eyed lass, would sit by his side and look at the stars. And at night long by her father's side his lovely little daughter.

She said to him, as she sat by his side, "Oh father, I fear that I am old, for I hear the sea so close."

Her father, who was old and feeble, said to her, "Do not fear, my daughter, for I am old and feeble, and I am old and feeble."

One day, before their eyes, they saw them all at once. The old man and his daughter were both dead.

"Can we not aid him with the boat?" cried this maid so true and brave. "Impossible," said the old man, "for you would share his watery grave."

"No boat could live upon that sea," said the old man, "for the waves are too high. We must throw them a line with the pivot gun."

Now there was work that must be done, for more than they could do. The old man and his daughter were both dead.

Out went the rocket with a roar and shriek. It hit the sea and the waves were all in a foam. The old man and his daughter were both dead.

There was hope, though but a spark. The old man and his daughter were both dead.

DEATH OF GEORGE FARAR.

The sudden death of his son, George Farar, on Friday evening last, at Brockville, on a large portion of the surrounding country where he was well known. Mr. Farar was a healthy man, about 18 years of age, and was attending his father's livery office, in the rear of St. Lawrence Hall, where the writer conversed with him, along with others, for a short time. About nine o'clock he went home, and commenced reading the papers, when he complained of a sore throat. He got some medicine that happened to be at hand, but it not affording relief, Dr. Webster, who was attending his daughter, Mrs. John A. Johnston, in another part of the house, was called to his assistance, but in less than fifteen minutes he was dead.

Mr. Farar was in the 50th year of his age and was born near Syracuse, N. Y. When quite young, he, with his parents, removed to Canada and settled near the R-r-dan school house in Elizabethton, where he spent his boyhood years. When about 18 years of age he worked with his brother William at blacksmithing at Addison. From there he went to the States and carried on business for a time at Buffalo, N. Y., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa. About 18 years ago he returned to Canada and settled in Brockville where he has carried on an extensive blacksmithing business up to the time of his death. A man of sterling integrity, a first class blacksmith, and a genial neighbor, he had a host of friends, not only in Brockville but as far as his acquaintance extended.

He is the last of a family of fourteen children, two sisters dying within the year. His wife, a Miss Dorsey of London, was a devoted wife and mother. She died of cancer of the breast on the 10th inst. The funeral took place on Sunday last at 2.30 p.m.

Good Roads.

The question of a better system of building and keeping our county roads is receiving marked attention from our legislators and prominent men all over the province. The Ontario Government propose appointing an inspector or commissioner whose duty it will be to visit all parts of the province and give advice on the proper construction of the roads of the country. The Good Roads Association which was formed a couple of years ago composed of practical men from different sections of the province have sent a letter of invitation to the inspector to visit the county and give him a full view of the roads of the county. The association is composed of men who are well known in the county and are well known in the county. The association is composed of men who are well known in the county and are well known in the county.
