YOUNG ROWDYISM

Residents of Stanley Ave. complain that a gang of very bad boys make night hideous by their yellings, howlings and howlings on the street. Last night the people thought the fire brigade was tearing along the grand old pavements. The young urchins had carts and little wagons loaded with all kinds of trucks, including a big cow bell. The complainants say it does not speak very well for the parents' training of these boys when they boldly insisted they had a perfect right to make all the noise they wished on the public street. It is up to them to know better at the police court next time. Their names have been down.
