WHERE WITCHES AND FAIRIES ONCE HELD HAPPY HUNTING GROUNDS.

Pascinating Chapter in the History of the Highlands of Scotland-A Tailor's Cunning Device-Little Girl Surprised Her Father by Sinking Ships With a Glance -A Shepherd's Experiment-A Popu lar Legend.

One of the most fascinating chapters in the history of the Highlands of Scotland is that which treats of witchcraft and second sight. The Highlands were the happy hunting grounds of witches and fairles, who differed in many respects from their unsavory sisters of the plains. There were the repulsive about the repulsive about differed in many respects from unsavory sisters of the plains. There was little of the repulsive about them, save, perhaps, in the physical sense, for they were usually poor old women to whom nature had been unkind; "De'il hae me, but the Lord was fair beside himsel' gin he gi'ed the poo'er o' evil intil the hands of sic an ill-faured (ill-favored) besom!" was frequently the contemptuous remark of the scoffer. They had no midnight meetings or dances with ous remark of the scorer. They had no midnight meetings or dances with the devil, "dead men's fingers" were excluded from their stock-in-trade, and it is doubtful if there was even a broomstick in the possession of all the unholy sisterhood. They were mostly blackmailers.

Witches' emarkable Pewers. Just as the Highland caterans lev ied soll on the Sassenach cattle-owners for the immunity of their stock, so, in most cases, the local witch demanded, and was generally paid, a manded, and was generally paid, a fixed sum annually, in consideration of which she agreed to refrain from exerting her evil powers on her clients' cattle beasts. Supernatural gifts had only to be claimed to acknowledged, and many of the happy women believed in their fessed power. Their employers to be happy women believed in their pro-fessed power. Their emoluments were not large, and some idea of the strenuous competition that latterly prevailed in the profession may be gathered from the fact that a pound could accomplish great things in the way of healing disease in a man or beast. Many remarkable powers were ascribed to the witches. in a man or beast. Many remarkation powers were ascribed to the witches. It was averred and believed that they could take the milk from their neighbor's cattle (generally by milking the iron crook on which the kettle was hing), and they could bring the herrings to the coast, and so insure the success of their fishermen clients, and, that they could raise storms and sink ships, drowning those who had given them offence. In fact, there was little the witch could not do when she had a mind. As Burns says in "Tam o' Shanter:"

"For meny a beast to dead she shot, And perished mony a bomble boat, And shook batth melkis corn and bear, And kept the countryside in fear."

And kept the countryside in fear."

They had a pretty way, too, of flying through the air with incredible swiftness to London or Dublin, where they took pessession of wine cellars and drank wine till morning. Curiously enough, they never thought of flying across the Irish Sea so long as they could sail across in an eggshell or a sieve. Then for a purely nominal charge they could waste an enemy with disease by the simple process of melting a waxen image process of melting a waxen image over the fire, and, when the spirit moved them, they were wont to turn themselves into seagulls, cats, hares Jaggers—Why does that De Style family always refuse custard ple?

To this day tales of the uncann To this day tales of the uncanny doings of the witches are told with bated breath round the peat fires of many a ione Highland croft, and one or two of these may be worth retelling. One night a Lewis tailor discovered the meeting place of a number of witches, among whom he recognized his own wife. They disappeared in creels, and returned in recognized his own wife. They disappeared in creels, and returned in the morning, each with her creel full of herrings. The tailor impressed on his wife the advantages of co-operation tion, and his arguments being con-sidered good he was allowed to actarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. The tailor, however, pre-vailed on his wife to hand over her duties to him and join her compan-ions; and when the wily man had paid out what he deemed a sufficiency of line he cut it, and the witches were all drowned. On the death of his wife, the tailor occasionally dab-bled in the black art. He had ob-served an old woman step into a creel, mutter an incantation, and disappear through the hole in the roof that formed the chimney, re-turning later with a basketful of herrings. In endeavoring to emulate this feat the tailor unfortunately forgot part of the incantation, and Harsh, purging medicine, but invariably find Dr. Humiton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut the mildest cure for constipation and sick headache. herrings. In endeavoring to emulate this feat the tailor unfortunately forgot part of the incantation, and consequently, instead of skipping lightly up the chimney he came hump with his head against the ratters. "Where in the name of God are you taking me?" cried he, when on the mention of the Deity the creel dropped to the floor with such violence that the tailor broke both his legs. There is no record that he continued his researches into the unknown.

A shepherd and his little daughter were walking on the hills of Mull, in view of the shipping in the Sound. "Father," said the little girl, "would you like to see me sink all those whips?" "You are surely joking, my girl," said the startled shepherd. "how could you do it?" The girl stooped down and looked through her legs backwards at the vessels, where upon they all whirled round and sank heneath the waves. The horrified father ascertained that both his wi's and daughter were witches, and with the assistance of the neighbors be burned the pair of them.

fireside when a number of cats en-tered the room, and sitting round the fire proceeded to make themselves comfortable. After a bit one of the cats rushed to the door, and, put-ting on a black cap, cried, "Hurrah for London!" and disappeared with a whisk of its tail. The others pro-ceeded to follow mit but are the ceeded to follow suit, but ere the last could get off the shepherd seized its cap, and shouting "Hurrah for London!" was in a trice hurtled its cap, and shouting Hurran for London!" was in a trice hurtled through the air to that identical city. There he got drunk in a wine cellar, where he was found in the morning by the wine merchant, who hauled him before the Lord Mayor. The unfortunate man was now re-gretting having left his comfortable gretting having left his commortance

Mayor ordered him to be hung. While awaiting his doom with the rope round his neck on the gallows, he made this last request that he should be allowed to die with the black cap his mother's last gift to him, so he said—on his head. No sooner had he donned the cap than with "Hur-rah for Skye!" shepherd and gal-lows and all whirled out of sight, and in less than no time he was back in Skye, where he made of the gal-lows a boat, which is to be seen in Skye to this day! Various districts claim the venturesome shepherd as their own, but for his method of locomotion it is clear that he have been a Skye man! Many of the stories of witches are obvious exaggerations of common-place occurrences. In these enlighten-ed days one would never dream o connecting the unusual antics of a frisky hare or an innocent tom cat with some misadventure of everyday life, but the Highlander of a bygone day was not so blind. A mist over the sea swirled into fantastic shapes by an eddying wind was, without doubt, a witch endeavoring to destroy a ship—indeed, there was little in the heavens above or on the earth beneath that the Highlander could not ascribe to witches. Few people take such notions now, but there are still a few of the "auld bodies" who tell such "auld farrant" tales as are here set down ecting the unusual antics of a there are still a few of the "auld bodies" who tell such "auld far-rant" tales as are here set down as if they believed in them.—The London Globe.

A BOLD HOAX.

Daring Fergery That Figured in the Fa-mous Tichborne Case-It is rather a striking fact that the greatest deception of the last century brought about one of the most daring forgeries. While the Tichborne case was dragging its weary length the court was staggered one morning by the receipt of a letter purporting to be written by Sir Algernon West at the direction of Mr. Gladstone, his chief, to Lord Chief Justice Bovill. The letter set forth that the slow progress of the trial was a public scandal and that we could not fall to become a byword to all civilized nations. Mr. Gladstone, the letter ran on, added: wer could not investigated nations.

Word to all civilized nations.

Gladstone, the letter ran on, added:

"He is aware that you are not in responsible for a state of our civilization." any sense responsible for a state of things which is a blot upon our civ things which is a blot upon our civ-il jurisprudence, but he thinks an early expression of your and per-haps his opinion, from the high po-sition you occupy, would tend to remedy a state of things which threatens to result in a virtual de-real of justica."

threatens to result in a virtual denial of justice."

Ballantine used to say of Bovill, "With a little more experience Bovill would be the worst judge of the bench." He believed the letter to be genuine and summoned his brother judges to advise him how to act in such an unprecedented interference with the administration of justice. Luckily one of his junior contemporaries had the wisdom to suggest that the best course was to see if the letter were really genuine before considering the grave constitutional question involved. Thereupon they sent down to Sir Algernon. He flew to Westminster. Of course, the thing was a monstroug forgery, and he was in time to prevent the precipitating of the thunderbolt that would inevitably have left the bench had Bovill not been wisely counseled. The author was never discovered, nor did they ascertain how he managed to get hold of official treasury note paper for the purpose.—St. James Gazette.

We have received, says The London Daily Chronicle, a letter written by Mr. Alfred Tennyson Dickens, who has lived in Melbourne for many years. As the eldest surviving son of Charles Dickens he strongly protests against a paragraph copied into the Commonwealth papers from some London source alleging that "Dickens, who never liked Thackeray, told a friend he could see nothing to admire in one of Thackeray's novels that was being serially published at the time." Mr. A. T. Dickens, "with every possible confidence," gives this statement a most emphatic contradiction. He recalls the fact that his father was the chief mourner at Thackeray's funeral in Kensal Green, and also wrote a biographical sketch of Thackeray in The Cornhill of January, 1864, which "did full justice to the genius and merits of the author of 'Vanity Fair' and 'Pendennis.' "Mr. Dickens adds that many a time he has heard his father speak in the most glowing terms of Thackeray's wonderful versatility. "More than this, I can truthfully say that I never heard him make use of any unkind or indiscreet expression in regard to any author or authoress of his time."

The Ruthless Issuesetast.

Lady Godiva is the latest favorite of history to be relegated to the realm of mythology. In her new book on the earls of Warwick Lady Warwick says that while Lady Godiva indoubtedly existed, appearing in the "Doomsday Book" as Godeva, it is impossible that she should ever have taken her famous ride through Coventry, for her husband. Earl Leofric, was of blessed memory and worthy of all praise, instead of being an oppressor of his people, who required to be propitiated by the sacrifice that has been attributed to Godiva.

Winning a Fur Coat. The artist Hans Canon once painted a Russian prince in a magnificent fur mantle which took his fancy so great ly that he endeavored to hit on a plan by which he might retain possession of it. On sending home the portrait he omitted to return the garment, and to the letter requesting him to do so he made no reply. One day, when looking out of a window, he saw the prince coming toward his house. Hastily slip-ping into the garb, Canon sat down in in armchair near the fire. The prince, who had come for his coat, started on seeing Cauon groaning and trembling at the fireside. "What is the matter at the fireside. "What is the matter with you?" he asked. "Oh," groaned Canon. "I don't know what it is, but I feel so weak and wretched, and I can not get warm! Two days ago my brother died of smallpox, and I am a bit pervous about myself." The artist kept the coat.

In late years men nave made fortunes out of the tailings of gold mines. The mills in which the ore formerly was crushed and the crude processes then in use allowed a large percentage of the precious metal to escape, and that loss amounted in some cases to a fortune. The stomach is just like a stamp mill in this respect, that when it is not in perfect order it allows the escape and waste of much of the precious nutriment contained in the food. That loss when continuous means the loss of man's greatest fortune — health. Science offers a remedy for this condition in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It corrects the weakness of the stomach, prevents waste and loss of nourishment, and puts the stomach, and organs of digestion and nutrition into a condition of health, which thables them to save and assimilate all the nutriment contained in the food which is eaten. In all cases of constipation the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will speedily and permanently cure disease.
