Legal Decisions.
1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office--whether distributed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not--is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrearages, and the publisher may continue to send it until the arrearages are paid, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and having them recalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

POETRY.

The Ship Comes In.

Oh, joy, joy and gladness,
When the ship comes in Forgotten soon the sadness When safe to port they win Who late were losing, weary Of the deep dark sea,
And counting life but dreary
For their ain country.

Oh, blithe, blithe the weather
When the ship comes in!
Folk talk all together,
There is cheer, there's merry din, Shouts waives roof and rafters, Hands clasp loving hand, Ripples out happy laughter,
When the ship comes to land.

Oh, swift run the hours That neither toll nor spin, But seem to tread on flowers
When the ship comes in!
Yestreen we battled, weary, Yet bravely held the fort,
But we'll nevermore be dreary-- Our ship's safe in port.

CHAPTER XI.
Wyndham was suggested to Valentine Paget very nearly a year before their wedding. One of the young lady's stipulations was that there no circumstances would she enter into the holy estate of matrimony before she was eighteen. Paget made no objection to this proviso on Val's part. In these days he humored her slightest wish, and no happier pair to all appearance could have been seen driving in the Park, or riding in the Row, than this handsome father and daughter.

"What a beautiful expression he has," remarked many people. And when they said this to the daughter she smiled, and a sweet proud light came into her eyes.

"My father is a darling," she would say. "No one knows him as I do. I believe he is about the greatest and the best of men."

When Val, made enthusiastic remarks of this kind, Wyndham looked at her sorrowfully. She was very fond of him by this time--he had learned to fit himself to her ways, to accommodate himself to her caprices, and although she frankly admitted that she could not for an instant compare him to her father, she always owned that she loved him next best, and that she thought it would be a very happy thing to be his wife.

No girl could look sweeter than Val when she made little speeches of this kind, but they had always a queer effect upon her lover, causing him to experience an excitement which was scarcely joy, for nothing could have more fatally upset Mr. Paget's plans than Valentine really to fall in love with Wyndham.

The wedding day was fixed for the first week in July, and Valentine was accompanied to the altar by no less than eight bridesmaids. It was a grand wedding--quite one of the events of the season, and those who saw it spoke of the bride as beautiful, and of the bridegroom as a grave, striking looking man.

"If a man constantly practices self-repression there comes a time when, in this special art, he almost reaches perfection. Wyndham had come to this stage; as even Lillias, who read her brother like a book, could see nothing amiss with him on his wedding day.
All, therefore, went merrily on this suspect occasion, and the bride and bridegroom started for the continent a shower of blessings and good wishes.

"Gerald, dear, I quite forgive you," said Lillias, as at the very last moment she put her arms round her brother's neck.

"What for, Lillias?" he asked, looking down at her.

This a shadow of great bitterness crossed the sunshine of his face. He stooped and kissed her forehead.

"You don't know my sis, so you cannot forgive it, Lillias," he continued.
"Oh, my darling, I know you," she said. "I don't think you could singlely mean that I have learned already to love Valentine a little, and I am sorry surprised at your choice. I forgive you fully, Gerald, for loving another girl better than your sister Lillias-- Good-bye, dear old Gerry. God bless you!"

"He won't do that, Lillias--he can't.
Oh, forgive me, dear, I didn't mean those words. Of course I'm the happiest fellow in the world."

Gerald turned away, and Lillias kissed Valentine, and they watched with a queer feeling of pain at her heart as the bridal pair amid cheers and blessings drove away.

Gerald's last few words had renewed Lillias' anxiety. She felt restless in the great, grand house, and longed to be back in the rectory.

"What's the matter, Lillias?" said Marjory; "your face is a yard long, and you are quite white and have dark lines under your eyes. For my part I did not think Gerald's wedding would be half so jolly, and what a nice, unaffected girl Valentine is."

"Oh, yes, I'm not bothering my head about her," said Lillias. "She's all right, just what father said she was.
