Patrick First of England.

The queen has requested that the new-born son of the Duke and Duchess of York be named Patrick.

Oh, Paddy, dear, and did you hear the news that's going round?
We've got a brand new Irish Prince though not on Irish ground;
Begorra! he's a daisy—great grandson of the queen,
And they've gone and named him Patrick "for the wearing of the green."

Oh, wait awhile, me bucke, when he's out of swaddling clothes,
And tears around with all the lads and colleens that he knows;
'Tis breaking heads and beaking hearts, he'll be, the young spalpeen,
And he'll sport a brave shillalah and a little sprig of green.

Oh, the taties he will treasure, and the pigs will be his pride.
And all the high nobility will view them side by side;
And mountain dew will be his joy—an old cutbeen his hat,
And all will call him Paley, or perhaps they'll call him Pat.

He'll lead the Irish party, and he'll win for us home rule,
And come and live in Ireland, and reign from off a stool.
We'll make him king of this old sod, and if he has the thirst,
We'll make him king of England, too, and call him Patrick First.

Edison's Initiation.

"A long time ago, when I was a mite of a boy," said Edison, "I, with two other little fellows, had saved up a lot of scrap iron, and tin and zinc which we meant to sell when the holidays came around. There was a large boy in the neighborhood (I think he must have become bunko steerer afterward) who knew of our hoard. One day when we had been in swimming he came to us and said:

"Say, you fellows, if you will give me that tin and iron and stuff you have, I'll teach you how to chew."

"The proposition struck us as being very fair, particularly as he agreed to furnish the tobacco. Well, we were quite willing, so he brought some Canadian cut down to a sand bank by the river. He divided the stuff into three parts and gave us each one. Then he said:

"'Now you must do exactly what I say, and you must do it right away, or you'll never learn how to chew.

"'Now, then,' he shouted, 'hold up!'

"We held it up.

"'Put it in your mouth,' he yelled.

"We put it in.

"'Chew!' he hissed dramatically.

"We worked away at a great rate.

"'Swallow it' he screeched.

"We gulped it down, and then that young rascal fairly rolled down the bank with laughter, while we soon rolled down the other side, sicker, I suppose, than any of us had been in our lives before or since. One of the boys nearly died, and they had a very serious time with him. That was my first experience with tobacco."

Written for the Acadian.

At Pretoria.

On a foggy October morning the employees in a large London store found trade unusually dull; when a boy about twelve years of age entered. His appearance was hailed with delight by the men, because they knew he had been employed by the firm to bring reports of the relations between Great Britain and the Transvaal. "Hallo! Bill," cried the foreman. "What news?" "War declared," said Bill in an important tone of voice, as he marched straight to the head office.

Having entered this room he was lost to the employes but they did not care for they were too excited to think of anything else but the news. They were recalled to their duty again, however, by the sharp ring of a bell which resounded through the room. "Why, what's that for?" cried James Douglas, lifting a curly head from a newspaper just got from a boy, and exposing a face that would have startled a stranger. It was not handsome but there were lines about the mouth and chin which told of firmness and perseverance; his eyes were brown with a kindly light in their depths. Just at that moment the office door opened and Mr Clements came out. "Men," said he, "perhaps you know that war has been declared and in honor of the occasion you are allowed a half holiday."

In a very few minutes the room was cleared of everyone excepting James Douglas and two superiors. "Sir," said our hero, approaching Mr Clemants, "I have long considered the possibility of this happening, and I am prepared to offer myself in the service of my country. I think that it would be better for me to get my discharge at once."

About three hours after this our hero was walking down Pall Mall after having undergone the necessary examination and after enrolling his name among many others for service in South Africa.

The next six weeks were spent in buying clothes and sundry articles needed, and in bidding good bye to friends and acquaintances. On a fine day toward the end of November our hero was on board a transport steaming out of Plymouth and headed for the Cape of Good Hope.

At last after a long journey, rendered attractive by the novelty, the "Ocean Flow" reached Cape Town. The appearance of this city was calculated to awaken every feeling of curiosity in the human breast. Back of the town is Table Mountain. Coming down its sides and lying at the bottom are numberless white houses giving the visitor the impression of being able to do quite a trade in the lines of whiting and white wash.

The day after the "Ocean Flow" dropped anchor at Cape Town, her troops were disembarked and detailed into companies. James Douglas was placed under Captain Watcliffe and ordered to join the force under Gen. Buller, which was pushing forward to the relief of Ladysmith. After six days hard traveling that force came in sight. Before them was a strip of dry land at the base of which rose white tents like [illegible]. Captain [illegible] an interview with [illegible] how goes things with you, General?" asked our genial captain.

"Well, I hardly know, but we are going to make an effort to hold Colenso, if possible," answered General Buller.

Then next day the battle of Colenso was fought and won by the British; but it has nothing to do with the tale so we will pass it by. Colenso taught General Buller that in order to be successful against the Boers he must have co-operation. This made it necessary for some one to get into Ladysmith and personally communicate with General White. Accordingly he broached the subject to his captains and asked them if they could recommend some one to do the job. "Yes," said Captain Watcliffe, "I have a fellow named Douglas in my company who would, I am sure, do it if possible." None of the others could recommend any better so the General said, "so be it then," and asked to have the young man presented to him.

After the battle James Douglas was surveying the camp when an orderly came up to him and delivered the message. He at once went to headquarters where General Buller explained his commission to him. He was to proceed to Ladysmith and interview the besieged General White and then he was to return and bring back an answer.

According that evening he set out for the besieged city. The first two nights he travelled without incident; but the third was not to pass so uneventually. While crossing a small patch of wood land he was suddenly seized from behind and before he had time to struggle he was bound with his hands behind his back. After this proceeding he was roughly ordered to rise and follow them. After a walk of over two miles he was taken to a tent and bade to enter. This he did and found within the tent a good meal and a bed of straw. After dispatching the meal he flung himself down on the straw and so forgot his troubles. Next morning James was again given a good meal, after which a soldier came in and told him to follow. Turning, he was led toward the entrance of a glen where he found a company of Boers going to Pretoria. He was sure of entering Pretoria as victor, but the possibility of entering the city as a prisoner never entered his head.

The journey was accomplished without any occurence worthy of note. After an examination by the custom officers they were allowed to enter. Our hero was placed in a room on the first floor of a large house, where he was left to his own devices. The Boers would not have been so happy had they known that one of their prisoners thought he would be able to kill hundreds of them. While the Boers were revelling outside James Douglas was thinking hard of escape. He walked over to the window and looked out. Just as he did so he saw that the guard was being removed and that no one was at the entrance to the city. By a sudden impulse he pulled up the window and made a dash for the gates. Several persons who were on the street gave chase but their efforts were unavailable and our hero gained the open country.

Here his dangers began, here he was alone in a hostile country without food or water. After hunting around for a time he found a stream of cool water and had a good drink. Of course his first thought was to return to Ladysmith and deliver his commission. On the morning of the first day of January, General White was in conference with a stranger. His name was not known nor was it subsequently disclosed; but anyway General White co-operated with Buller and gained the second battle of Colenso. Our hero now signs his name as

CAPTAIN JAMES DOUGLAS.

This and That.

Happy is the bride the sun shines on—if she isn't afraid of freckles.

Many a man would have a better wife if he wasn't such a poor husband.

The man who takes the cake thinks it is no more than his just dessert.

Some one will be sure to take your advice if you have it engraved on the handle of a ten dollar umbrella.

There is nothing like poverty to give one a practical knowledge of the scarcity of the milk of human kindness.

When Rev. John McNeil was holding revival services at Cardiff, a young man, one night, thinking to perplex the preacher, sent up a note to the platform with the request that the following question might be publicly answered:

"Dear Mr McNeil, if you are seeking to help and enlighten young men, kindly tell me who was Cain's wife?"

Mr McNeil read the note and then amid breathless silence, he said:

"I love young men—enquirers for truth, especially—and I should like to give this young man a word of advice. It is this: Don't lose your soul's salvation looking after other people's wives."

When Fire Breaks Out.

In case of fire, if the burning articles are at once splashed with a solution of salt and nitrate of ammonia an incombustible coating is formed. This is a preparation which can be made at home at a trifling cost, and should be kept on hand.

Dissolve 20 pounds of common salt, and 10 pounds of nitrate of ammonia in seven gallons of water. Pour this into quart bottles of thin glass, and fire grenades are at hand ready for use.

These bottles must be tightly corked and sealed to prevent evaporation, and in case of fire they must be thrown near the flames, so as to break and liberate the gas contained. At least two dozen of these bottles should be ready for an emergency.

If a fire once gets under headway and prompt exit becomes a necessity, a silk handkerchief dipped in water and then wrapped about the mouth and nostrils will prevent suffocation from smoke, failing this, a piece of wet flannel will answer.

Should smoke fill the room, recall your physics—remember that smoke goes first to the top of the room and last to the floor. Wrap a blanket or woolen garment about you, with the wet cloth over your face, drop on your hands and knees and crawl to the window. Bear in mind that there is no more danger in getting down from a three-story window than from the first floor if you keep a firm hold of the rope or ladder. Do not slide, but go hand over hand.

THE VIRTUES OF
Paine's Celery Compound
Are recognized by the Ablest Physicians.

IT IS THE GREAT SYSTEM BUILDER IN THE SPRING TIME.

It Produces Solid and Healthy Flesh, Makes Pure Blood and Strong Nerves.

The peculiar and distinguishing medicinal virtues of Paine's Celery Compound are fully recognized by the ablest medical men in every part of the Dominion.

In its peculiar power and ability to invigorate the body, to make new blood and to regulate the nerves, lies the great value of Paine's Celery Compound in the waning diseases and [illegible] kidneys, liver and [illegible] year, when thousands are run down and sick, Paine's Celery Compound comes to the rescue of the shaky and enfeebled nerves and keeps them from utter prostration and ruin, and banishes that feeling of exhaustion that is the cause of despondency, melancholia and depression among men and women of all ages.

Paine's Celery Compound makes solid and healthy flesh, pure blood and strong nerves.

Paine's Celery Compound strengthens the digestive powers, and restores the nervous system when impaired from over-exertion of mind or body.

The best test that can be applied to Paine's Celery Compound is to use a bottle or two at this time when the body needs cleansing and building up.

Man born in the wilds of Kentucky is of feud days and easy virtue. He fisheth, fiddleth and fighteth all the days of his life. He shunneth water as a mad dog and drinketh much whiskey.

He riseth even from his cradle to seek the scalp of his grandfather's enemy, and bringeth home in his carcass the ammunition of his neighbor's wife's uncle's father-in-law who avengeth the deed.

Yea, verily, his life is uncertain and he knoweth not the hour when he may be fired hence.

He goeth on a journey "half shot" and cometh back on a shutter shot.

He rises in the night to let the cat out, and it taketh nine doctors three days to pick the buckshot from his person.

He goeth forth in joy and gladness and cometh back in scrap and fragments.

He calleth his fellow man a liar and getteth himself filled with scrap iron, even to the fourth generation.

He empaleth a demijohn into himself and a shot gun into his enemy and his enemy's son lieth in wait on election day, and, lo, the Coroner ploweth up a forty acre field to bury the remains of that man.—Manila American.

Breaking Even.

"Excuse me, Brother Sogback," said an Arkansas woman who was one of the high pirates at the church festival, addressing a determined looking gentleman who was gastronomizing at one of the tables, "but are you—ah! going to stop eating pretty soon? You have your fifth bowl of oyster stew now, and—ah!"

"The case," replied Brother Sogback, with his mouth full, "stands like this, Sister Hooks: You made me pay in advance. I forked over a $5 bill, and you sweetly told me that as it was for the benefit of the church it was against the rules to give any change back. So, now, sister, I'm goin' to keep right on eatin' till one of these things happens—till the rules are amended for my benefit or I get my money's worth or bust. That's the kind of man I am, Sister Hooks."

REDEEM the time.
Think not to work for God some future day,
Some other time begin to work and pray.
But do it now,
God's day is near.
Stop not for tears, stay not for moan or sighs;
Look up, for thy redemption draweth nigh,
Watch thou and pray.

For the sake of our countrywoman, Frances E. Willard, who so dearly loved the cause to which she gave her life, let us cherish the ribbon she was so proud to wear. In the land where the cry of sorrow can never reach, she laid aside the badge so long and so nobly worn for the white robes of the victor. Let us believe, as she did in the ultimate triumph of our cause, and that although

Yet earth shall brighten in the ray

Without Wine Sauce, Please.

A young man sat at a hotel table with a gentleman and a lady friend, for whom he felt the greatest respect. The waiter said to the gentleman:

"Will you have some pudding with wine sauce?"

"Yes," was the answer.

The young man's craving for strong drink was aroused at the mention of wine sauce, and his waiter's question, plus any fancy friend quickly said:

"Pudding without wine sauce, if you please."

"Without wine sauce," came the young man's reply.

Afterward, in the parlor, he said to her: "I want to thank you for doing me a great favor."

She looked astonished. "You do not know what it meant to me when you said at the dinner table, 'Pudding without wine sauce, if you please.'"

He then told her his struggle against strong drink, and how near he had come to falling, saved only by her timely example."—Union Signal.

"Have Faith in God."

To those who have followed the cause of temperance from its feeble beginnings to its triumphal position at the close of the century, the growth is simply marvellous and may be likened to the falling of an acorn, something so tiny that a baby's hand may enfold it, into the crevice of a rock. Slowly and silently it grows, pushing wider, and ever wider apart, the little rift, until the rock is wrenched asunder and the mighty tree stands proudly above the fragments. Even so the roots of the temperance cause are striking deeper and ever deeper and although the ruin may be gradual the day will surely come when the rock of intemperance will no longer obstruct the onward march of humanity.—Woman's Journal.

They Hurt His Nerves.

Boys, do you desire to have always good, strong nerves? Then do not use cigarettes. You think they are harmless? They certainly look very innocent—only a roll of white paper with a bit of doctored tobacco inside. But they do weaken the nerves; and, in fact, they have kept many a man from securing a good position on a certain railroad in the West. Read what Geo. Baumhoff, superintendent of the Lindell railway of St. Louis, says of their use: "Under no circumstances will I hire a man who smokes cigarettes. He is as dangerous on the front end of a motor as a man who drinks, in fact, he is more dangerous. His nerves are bound to give way at a critical moment. A motorman needs all his nerve all the time, and a cigarette smoker can't stand the strain. It is a pretty tough job for men in good condition, and even they sometimes get flurried. If I find a car beginning to run badly and getting irregular for any time, I immediately begin to investigate the man to find out if he smokes cigarettes. Nine times out of ten he does, and then he goes for good."—Selected.

"Blessed are the Pure in Heart."

A man who has been redeemed by the blood of the Son of God should be pure. He who is an heir of life should be holy. He who is attended by celestial beings, and who is soon—he knows not how soon—to be translated into heaven, should be holy. Are angels my attendants? Then I should walk worthy of my companionship. Am I so soon to go and dwell with angels? Then I should be pure. Are these feet so soon to tread the courts of heaven? Is this tongue soon to unite with heavenly beings in praising God? Are these eyes of mine so soon to look on the throne of eternal glory; and on the ascended Redeemer? Then these feet, and eyes and lips should be pure and holy, and I should be dear to the world, and live for heaven.—Albert Barnes.
