ARRIVAL OF THE ENGLISH MIL.

The Courier with English, American, and Colonial Mail arrived in Town on Tuesday evening last, the 12th instant. Liverpool dates are to the 20th ult. We glean the following from the European Times:—

GERAT BRITAIN.

Louis Napoleon has given another proof of his anxiety to cultivate friendly relations with this country—if we will let him. Mr Lindsay, the great shipowner, has been to Paris, to seek an interview with the Minister of Marine, but hearing of his presence, the Emperor desired to see him, invited him to the Tuilleries, and then to have him to a meeting to discuss the mercantile condition of the late France, the shipping of that country. Mr Lindsay is great at statistics, and more especially statistics connected with the mercantile navy. These he laid before the Emperor, and although they told their own tale he impressed to them additional weight by his verbal disquisition. It was the opinion of the English Ambassador that England speedily will proceed to blockade the French coast, greater than ever received from any monarch who has filled the French throne. The Emperor, in point of fact, is an ardent Free-trader, and has made up his mind to carry out the system, not of course because it has been prohibited. Some studies have been expeditiously made to that effect. Yet notwithstanding these facts, one of our public writers continue to snarl at Louis Napoleon in the old style, anxious to maintain as long as possible that Bonaparte-phobia which is, we are glad to say, rapidly dying out.

Mr. Fox has returned to England. He reached Paris on Tuesday on his way from Algeria, had an interview with the Emperor of the French, and left immediately for London. In making this long journey at this season of the year, with no inconsiderable danger to his health, which he went to Algeria to recruit, Mr. Fox made a serious sacrifice, which the world will be glad to know, was not in vain.

The bombardment of Gaeta slackened their fire yesterday. The morning paper magazine exploded in the said city, killing Casanova and Casanare. The victory was complete.

The Emperor, in his letter declining a sword of honor, says that such a distinction is conferred only for general aids.—Now it is only well known that he has done nothing of the kind. The pronouncements I defended have been conquered, the towns taken, the war material lost, and the whole army led into captivity.

ROME, Jan. 23.—Prince Carignan has held a review of the National Guard, by whom he was received with enthusiasm.
