TWO BRAVE WOMEN.

Lived in a Dugout on the Belgian Front.

The Baroness T'Serclaes and Miss Mairi Chisholm, two English women who have lived in a dugout on the Belgian front for three and a half years, caring for the Belgian troops, and who are known throughout the Belgian army as the "Good women of Pervyse," have arrived in London, suffering from the effects of a gas attack on the Belgian front in the recent fighting there. Both have been seriously ill, but are now sufficiently recovered to be admitted to a convalescent hospital.

"We were accustomed to bombardment," said the baroness in an interview, "and our dugout has been hit a hundred times since we lived there. But in this last attack the shelling was more dreadful than we have ever known."

"It was early one morning after a night-long bombardment that we decided to venture out, knowing that there would be many wounded needing our care. While we were dressing, I heard a shell burst outside our dugout, and a moment later I found our orderly lying on the floor of the corridor. I rushed up to see what I could do for him, when suddenly I felt as if a rope had been fastened around my neck."

"I could not breathe and was absolutely helpless. Miss Chisholm, too, was in agonies. My little dog, Shot, who had been with us for three years, came up and looked at me with wondering eyes, licked my hand and died. I don't think I had ever before felt that I actually hated my enemy, but ever since my dog was gassed I have longed above all else to kill a German."

"It was only about half an hour before we were taken away in an ambulance. The ambulance was smashed by a shell after a quarter of a mile and we were picked up again and taken in a big truck to a base hospital. We were there several days before we were able to be moved to London."

The two "Women of Pervyse" have been the only women who have been permitted to live and work at the Belgian front. Hundreds of volunteers, American and British, have asked to be allowed to help them, but the Belgian command would not even allow a third woman at Pervyse.

In the early days they worked single-handed, but a doctor, two stretcher-bearers and a chauffeur came to help them later in their little casualty station. The nearest hospital is ten miles from Pervyse. Their station was always open day and night for trivial ailments as well as for serious wounds. Their dugout was made of concrete, and had an operation room, a kitchen and a small sleeping room.

The husband of the baroness is a Belgian army officer.

Using German Dead To Spread Propaganda

Enemy Seeking to Influence Allies By Stories of Declining Morale of German Troop

(Toronto Saturday Night)

Newspaper correspondents at the front are feeding us just now upon quantities of extracts from diaries and letters found on the bodies of German soldiers. These writings are unquestionably authentic, to the extent that they are found on German dead, and undoubtedly are sent forward in good faith by these correspondents as tending to inform their readers as to the desperate straits of the German Troops, their utter disgust with the war, the lowering morale of the rank and file, and many other items, interesting, if true. The German propensity for keeping diaries is, of course, well known but at the same time one is led to doubt, considering German methods, if a private soldier would be allowed to write anything in his little diary which was not known and approved of by the officer in whose charge he was. If such be the case, why the diary or the letter for home, which has been written but never posted?

Let us look back a bit, and possibly we will find the explanation. It will be remembered that the German Government acquired at a considerable expense the New York "Mail" for propaganda purposes. Those in New York who were working for the Kaiser, were not so fools enough to get out and defend in the "Mail" the sinking of the Lusitania or any other monstrous act of their Government. They would thereby give themselves away immediately. Suspicion would have been attracted towards them and their usefulness to their mother land would have been over. On the contrary, they began telling their readers of internal troubles in Germany, strikes in Berlin, shortage of food, complaints of the populace; anything in fact that would give the impression that this was the Kaiser's and the Junker's, but not the peoples' war.

For a time they got away with it.
They were creating the impression, for United States consumption, that the German people were to be pitied and not blamed. Then after a time when German plot and counter plot was discovered in the United States, the officials began better to understand this subtle German Propaganda of crying of the woes of the German people. It was to keep the United States out of the war, to create a sentiment in a Democracy for the alleged suffering of the common people of Germany. Through the "Mail" attempts were even made to have this propaganda, written in German by German agents, in German incorporated in the material sent out from the official publicity bureaus in Washington. These attempts all failed, however, and the alleged proprietor of the "Mail" was eventually jailed. By weighing these few facts, one may well be suspicious of this multitude of enemy diaries and letters. But there is still another reason why this literature from German sources should be looked upon with suspicion, and that is that it all tends to lull the Allies into a security that perchance is not so real as it looks. Presuming that it led the allied armies to lay to themselves, "Well, now we have got them licked.
Let us sit down on the job for awhile. There is no hurry about it.
We have Fritz on the run." Or again, looking at it from another angle, suppose we count on a great outstanding victory, getting to the Rhine this autumn, for instance, the idea being fermented in part possibly by the alleged disorganization behind the German lines and the disinclination of the enemy troops to fight on.

And presume in place of a great victory that opens up the Rhine valley to the Allies, we get a setback. Under such circumstances a reaction in public sentiment and possibly despondency would not be unnatural. Of course, the German is foiled to this extent, no matter how blue we get, and how adverse the circumstances, fight on we will.
However, it is just as well to avoid discouragement by not placing too implicit confidence in German letters and diaries, found on dead soldiers at the front. German propaganda has followed even stranger courses than loading up unburied German corpses with phony literature. German psychology is beyond the ken of other races.
